It continues eastward through the cities of Goodyear , Avondale , and Tolleson ; where it has an interchange with northbound Loop There are numerous construction projects along the Papago Freeway spanning both east and westbound from around Dysart Road in Avondale, to Verrado Way in Buckeye. The projects are expected to convert the current 4 lane divided freeway into a 6 to 10 lane divided freeway. The main project is complete. Along with the anticipation of the completion of State Route , traffic coming in and out of Phoenix is anticipated to be less congested, and easier to manage. The tunnel is locally called the Deck Park tunnel, as Margaret T. Hance Park is located above. Turning southward at this interchange, I runs adjacent to Sky Harbor International Airport before an interchange with the southern terminus of I Maricopa Freeway[edit] I west at The Split interchange with I north After this second I interchange, I occupies the eastern leg of the Maricopa Freeway , presumably named after the Native American tribe for which the county is also named. It regains its primary eastward direction as it crosses the Salt River , but after meeting SR it turns south again via the Broadway Curve , [5] where it enters the city of Tempe. There, an interchange with US 60 is located. The freeway enters its final city in the Valley of the Sun, Chandler , where Loop intersects I at another four-level symmetrical stack interchange before the Interstate enters the Gila River Indian Community and continues on through the undeveloped stretch of desert between Phoenix and the fast-growing town of Casa Grande before making its way southeast toward the Tucson metropolitan area. It then continues directly southward on the 27th and 25th Avenue alignments in northern Phoenix, passing Metrocenter Mall as it heads directly for downtown. Another four-level stack awaits I when it meets Interstate 10 immediately northwest of downtown at The Stack. Maricopa Freeway[edit] At Durango Street, in the segment of freeway known as the Durango Curve, the highway turns eastward, becoming the western leg of the Maricopa Freeway, and provides a southerly bypass of downtown before meeting I again near Sky Harbor and terminating the Maricopa Freeway, though, continues eastward with the I designation. Although the plan is to connect the entire freeway to either US 60 or another highway alignment in western Pinal County , only a small portion of the freeway between Loop and Ellsworth Road has been constructed and was opened in May The rest of the freeway is to be constructed as plans are finalized and funding becomes available. The Williams Gateway Freeway formerly SR is currently under study in Pinal County; a public hearing on the draft environmental assessment was held in Fall After passing near Paradise Valley , Route 51 reaches its northern terminus at Loop The name change was controversial, with most residents still referring to both the freeway and the landmark peak as Squaw Peak. Route 60 Superstition Freeway [edit] Main article: After crossing into Maricopa County and into east Mesa , a four-level interchange dubbed the SuperRedTan awaits motorists. This interchange, completed in , provides access to the Red Mountain and Santan Freeway segments of Loop Continuing westward past the interchange, the freeway passes through the heart of Mesa before meeting Loop and eventually duplexing with westbound I near Tempe before beginning its concurrency with I in Phoenix. Proceeding northward through the West Valley cities of Glendale and Peoria , Loop turns eastward along the Beardsley Road alignment. In the northern section of Phoenix , there is an interchange with Interstate 17 , which is where the Pima Freeway segment begins. Its primary purpose is to distribute east side airport traffic from and to Eastbound Loop and I without utilizing stop-and-go surface streets. A recently completed project added two new directional ramps for traffic directed to the airport and to southbound SR destined for I and reconstructed an existing loop ramp from northbound SR to westbound Sky Harbor Boulevard. There are no additional plans to upgrade or reconstruct any portions of the nearly four-mile expressway. Route and Loop intersect the Red Mountain Freeway at various points in the city prior to the road entering the northern reaches of Mesa , where it had temporarily ended at Power Road. During the early years of planning, the segment east of the Mini Stack was designated as the "East Papago Freeway" and extended to a proposed alignment that routed the freeway through the Papago Buttes and on into south Scottsdale along McDowell Road. However, after later revisions moved the current alignment to angle southeasterly along 52nd St and then skirt the north bank of the Salt River , the freeway was renamed the Red Mountain Freeway , avoiding confusion with the I Papago Freeway and helping to more consistently identify with future extension to Mesa. Santan Freeway[edit] The Santan Freeway segment comprises the southern half of the partial beltway and begins at US 60 , heading south into the town of Gilbert. Turning westward near Phoenix-Mesa Gateway Airport , the freeway passes through Chandler with an interchange at the southern terminus of Loop Loop proceeds westward, following the Pecos Road alignment until meeting its current terminus at I 19 where an interchange was built with Loop expansion westward in mind. Currently, there are two segments of freeway. The first one, begins at a grade interchange with I 19 a stack interchange is to be constructed. The freeway continues all the way to the newly completed stack interchange with I 19 Along the way, there is an interchange with every arterial road 1 mile intervals with the exception of Olive Avenue, which does not have one due to the Northern Parkway interchange. Construction of a parclo interchange with US 60 was to start in late Construction of the El Mirage interchange is to start The entire segment will be upgraded to a 6 lane freeway and completed by The remaining segment which ends at the newly completed stack interchange with I 19 has already been upgraded to freeway standards. Construction of the freeway south of its junction with Interstate 10 to Van Buren Street is to start in Eventually it will connect to proposed Route 30 and possibly Interstate 10 Beginning at an interchange with Loop , it follows the Butler Drive alignment half a mile south of Olive Avenue for about 4 miles until turning southeast to align with Northern Avenue right before its current terminus at Dysart Road. It is intended to relieve heavy traffic on Northern Avenue, some being contributed by the nearby military base. Phase II plans for construction of the route between Dysart Road and Loop , including multiple grade-separated intersections, with a completely controlled-access interchange where it will meet with Loop Construction is projected to start in or 1995 SR 50 was removed from the system on December 15, 1995, when then Arizona governor Fife Symington made some funding cuts that included removal of the Paradise Parkway and Estrella Freeway from the system entirely. The Estrella Freeway was re-added to the system when Proposition 130 was passed ten years later in 2000 Route 50 will not be re-added to the system, because in February the ADOT auctioned off all the right-of-way it had purchased for the freeway , which was to be located between Loop and Route 51 in the Central Valley.
