JANE AUSTEN PRIDE AND PREJUDICE Edited by Appendix 1: Thomas Egerton and the publication history Appendix 4: Note on the second and third editions of.

After leaving home, Ryerson worked as an usher in a London grammar school, before his father sent for him to return home. He did so and farmed for a small period of time before leaving again, this time to Hamilton to attend Gore District Grammar School. In Hamilton, he studied Latin and Greek with such fervour that he became ill with a fever that almost claimed his life. This enabled him to become a Methodist missionary or circuit rider. His first post was the York region surrounding Yonge Street. The circuit took four weeks to complete on foot or horseback, as it encompassed areas with roads in extremely poor condition. However, the experience gave Ryerson a first hand look at the life of the early pioneer. Methodists were singled out as American and therefore disloyal. Money was requested of the crown to allow the Anglican church to maintain ties to Great Britain. As Ryerson was the son of a Loyalist, this was an abomination. Ryerson was castigated by the reformist press at that time for apparently abandoning the cause of reform and becoming, at least as far as they were concerned, a Tory. In Ryerson allowed his name to stand for re-election one last time but was soundly defeated by a vote of 50 to 1 in favour of his co-religionist Jonathan Scott. Educator[edit] In April , Ryerson wrote in The Christian Guardian newspaper, On the importance of education generally we may remark, it is as necessary as the light " it should be as common as water and as free as air. Education among the people is the best security of a good government and constitutional liberty; it yields a steady, unbending support to the former, and effectually protects the latter The first object of a wise government should be the education of the people Partial knowledge is better than total ignorance. If total ignorance be a bad and dangerous thing, every degree of knowledge lessens both the evil and the danger. When it was incorporated in under the name Victoria College Ryerson assumed the presidency. Victoria continues to exist as part of the University of Toronto. Ryerson also fought for many secularization reforms, to keep power and influence away from any one church, particularly the Church of England in Upper Canada which had pretensions to establishment. His advocacy of Methodism contributed to the eventual sale of the Clergy Reserves "large tracts of land that had been set aside for the "maintenance of the Protestant clergy" under the Constitutional Act of It is in this role that Ryerson made his historical mark. It was his study of Native education [6] commissioned in by the Assistant Superintendent General of Indian Affairs that would become the model upon which residential schools were built. An agricultural laboratory on the site led to the later founding of the Ontario Agricultural College and the University of Guelph. James Square went through various other educational uses before it eventually became part of Ryerson University. He was also a writer, farmer, and sportsman. He is buried in Mount Pleasant Cemetery, Toronto. His major innovations included libraries in every school, an educational journal and professional development conventions for teachers, a central textbook press using Canadian authors, and securing land grants for universities. Superintendent of Schools for Upper Canada[edit] Ryerson observed that previous educational legislation, most notably the Common School Act of , was ineffective due to the limited powers of authority of the Superintendent of Schools. By comparing the office of the Superintendent to a corresponding office in New York State , namely the "State Superintendent", he noted that the Act allowed the Superintendent to draw up rules and responsibilities but no one was required to follow them. This considerably expanded the role of Superintendent and placed significantly more responsibility upon the office. Further, he established the first General Board of Education the one established in was by order of the Lieutenant Governor not by legislation. The board consisted of the Superintendent and six other members nominated by the Governor General. Ryerson recommended, although it did not become part of the legislation that followed from the bill, that as a savings measure the offices of Clerk of the District and District Superintendent be combined. Again, benchmarking the New York system, he noted that an Act passed in provided authority to the State Superintendent of Schools and county superintendents to reject any book in a school library. That system utilized University Regents to create a list of acceptable texts from which the schools purchased books. Ryerson did not propose absolute authority on book selection, rather, recommended that the Board of Education "make out a list of School Text Books, in each branch of learning that they would recommend, and another list they would not permit leaving Trustees to select from these lists. His convictions on the matter were strengthened after studying systems of education in New York State and Massachusetts where financial provision for education was a cardinal one. Proving his point that education was a necessity, he was able to show, for example, in Toronto alone, less than half of the 4, children in the city were regular school attendees. That every child born, or brought up in the Country, has a right to that education which will fit him for the duties of a useful citizen of the Country, and is not to be deprived of it, on account of the inability, or poverty, of his parents, or guardians. Many children are now kept from school on the alleged grounds of parental poverty. Subsequent debate followed until when free school provision was included in the Comprehensive School Act of His expert advice was sought by the Department of Indian Affairs in and those recommendations for Aboriginal schools were appended to the first publication in of "Statistics Respecting Residential Schools" since the Indian Act ; "Agriculture being the chief interest, and probably the most suitable employment of the civilized Indians, I think the great object of industrial schools should be to fit the pupils for becoming working farmers and agricultural labourers, fortified of course by Christian principles, feelings and habits. The plaque contains the following text: In , the Truth and Reconciliation Commission reported that children in the schools were subjected to unthinkable abuse and neglect, to medical experimentation, punishment for the practice of cultures or languages and death. The aim of the Residential School System was cultural genocide.
