

Chapter 1 : Past AES President Frank Wells | Ask Me Anything Interview

This has always been my FAVORITE book about the Presidents. I've spent so much time looking for an updated version of the one I have, but I haven't found anything that can match the FUN of "Ask Me Anything About the Presidents."

Audio-Technica 2 Comments This past October, Audio-Technica was fortunate to participate in the Audio Engineering Society AES Convention for another season, where the heavy-hitters in sound equipment converge each year to showcase their exciting new products. The questions came from the crowd and from Twitter. In addition to his position on the executive committee, Wells has been an AES member since and has held numerous positions on boards within the organization. Previously, Frank was editor of Audio Media, did a stint as chief engineer at a public radio station, and was also chief of technical services at Masterfonics Studios from to How do you feel the music industry has changed in the past 20 years? In the last 20 years. Okay, or in 10 years? If we have an hour, we can just answer that one question for the next little bit. The industry has changed phenomenally, obviously. The recording industry has dropped from being a brick-and-mortar institution only, where you had to pay a million and a half bucks to play and to be competitive in it, to where everybody can compete. The democratization of recording as everyone has highly touted, but that also means that the gear purchasing chain has gone to retail. The live sound side is still big business on touring. That music channel has kind of dried up, so now artists, to make a living, are also making more out of live performances. If you wanted to get into the industry either live sound or recording or any aspect of it, is there any advice or encouragement that you can give people trying to get their foot into the door? Attitude is still the most important thing. Dan and I had this discussion shortly ago because he runs intern programs for Middleton State University. That attitude is the thing that when we always had interns coming in that set them apart one from the other. The intangible attitude, you have to have the foundation of knowledge. You have to have the ability to work, but the attitude you bring to the equation is the biggest thing. Somewhere, somehow, it will happen. Is the idea of the album disappearing? Obviously from the way download trends are going, it is moving towards singles, to a single-driven industry again. There are a lot of artists who have embraced the concept of doing EPs, short nines, you know, two or three songs, four songs per bit and doing those three, four times a year and keeping that fan base fed. Wells again for participating in our event this year. What do you think about the state of the album today? Tell us about it in the comments section below, or on Facebook and Twitter , and keep checking the blog for more professional sound equipment advice!

Chapter 2 : I am Barack Obama, President of the United States -- AMA : IAmA

Born on September 9, , Esther Cleveland, the second child of President and Mrs. Grover Cleveland, was the first child of a president to be born in the White House. Esther Cleveland, however, was not the first child to be born in the White House.

Our resident psychologist answers your queries about sex and relationships Independent. I love my wife very much, but she constantly criticises my parents. She is a very open and honest person, and I really do love that about her, but sometimes I would rather not hear every fault or mistake my family make. We buy each other expensive presents and family events tend to involve a lot of socialising, which she thinks is inappropriate with children present. I have said this to her, but it is in one ear and out the other. Most notably, you love how authentic she is. I think you and your wife need to have a flexible and adaptive conversation. This conversation asks both of you to grow a bit – this will be uncomfortable, ergo the flexible part, which is needed from both sides. The adaptive part is making changes to the way you both respond and react to each other and others, which is the hard part. A good way to start this conversation is to tell your wife that one of the things you love and value about her is how open and honest she is. Whilst this is a wonderful trait, you need to express how it can sometimes feel too much when it comes as a constant negative stream in the direction of your parents. Then say that you have learned a lot and have now seen things that were hidden in plain sight to you through her eyes. Truths about your parents that are accurate and helpful. It is easier for your wife to see these home truths as she is unencumbered by all dynamics, history and the family norms that you have adhered to and accepted. What you are asking for going forward is for her to filter her honesty through the lens of integrity. To think of how her words will be heard by you. To be mindful that she is speaking about your parents and that how the message is delivered and her intent behind it will help you hear it less defensively. Anyone can tell the truth – delivering that message with integrity is a much more compassionate affair. This adaptation will hopefully work for all. Ever wonder why it is so easy to fight? Stan Tatkin takes a psychobiological understanding to working with couples and says our brain is wired for war and not love. The only way this can happen is if you feel safe and that you will be respectfully heard whilst voicing how you feel. Does this mean blindly agreeing to everything they say to you? What may come up as an argument about your parents is a plea to discuss things that are not sitting well with your wife. I do believe in couples being very good friends, having respect for what each other is saying, and as you put down the words of war you will then hear what the disagreement is really about. How can you peel back the layers of this onion? Go back, start at the beginning and question and answer the belief system that underpins your family norms. Ask questions of what the expectations would be for different social occasions, for birthdays, Christmas, etc. What made the day special, what were the hidden or open expectations? Chapter 3 : Ask me anything about the presidents | The United States Studies Society

Which President killed a man in a duel? Who was arrested while holding office? What did Lincoln dream the night before his assassination. A fun and fascinating guide to the U.S. Presidents from Washington to Clinton-with a portrait of each one and a description of each man's life and accomplishments.

You know the one. Bush were displayed, 1 through 41, portrait-style and impressive. Look at it carefully. This version includes Presidents Clinton and George W. Bush, and is somewhat out of date because our boy, Barack Obama, is yet to be included. But that is immaterial. I am trying to be nostalgic here, and this image is close enough to the Cold War-era one I had as a kid. Looking at them in chronological order is like examining the ringed layers in an old Sequoia tree trunk. These guys made history! There are the almost comical paintings of the first 7 presidents up to Andrew Jackson. Number 8, I believe, is the first portrait photograph of Martin Van Buren. For your information, he was not a great president. None of the presidents from him to 15, James Buchanan, were. So we have something to talk about. It is an interesting and funny book peppered with little-known factoids about the presidents. Going back to our list again, did you know that 17, Andrew Johnson, was a drunk? And that 18, Ulysses S. Hayes was apparently an ambidextrous impresario who could write simultaneously in English in one hand, and Hebrew in the other. I still chuckle when I think about it. You cannot see it in this version, but in my World Book, 22 and 24, Grover Cleveland, the only president ever to serve two non-consecutive terms, was actually reproduced twice, sandwiching 23, Benjamin Harrison. Benjamin Harrison was the grandson of 9, William Henry Harrison, the one who died in office after a month because he chose not to wear an overcoat or top hat while delivering his 2-hour inaugural address, dying of pneumonia. Lesson to future presidents: Keep your addresses short. Who was the fattest president? Unlike some of us, he had choices. Ask 32, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, who is the longest-serving president and who was the only president elected 4 times. He was a silver spoon-fed child of the New York aristocracy who grew up a Democrat because he knew that the Depression required swift governmental action to help the poor and the suffering. If you ask me who my favourite president is, I would say that it was 33, Harry Truman, because HBO got in early and made the first ever biopic on a president I ever saw, which obviously made an imprint. A close second is 35, John F. Kennedy, because more than most presidents, he was urbane and witty and knew how to put words together, or at least hire people who knew how to put words together shoutout to Ted Sorensen ; and if you set aside his salacious character flaws, he and his family deserve massive props for making public service cool. I will skip a few and end with 39, Jimmy Carter. I am currently in the process of revising history to resurrect his reputation. As an Australian student of the United States at the United States Studies Centre, we can only hope that all presidents share this view.
