

Chapter 1 : 4 Ways to Be Cool at School in Uniform - wikiHow

Learn and Earn. Please wait while we find the video for you. Check back soon!

What qualities do women see in cool guys? Are you a cool guy already or can you be seen as cooler? Being a cool guy makes you more popular. It all starts from the time we get to middle school and continues for majority of our lives. But how much of it actually works? These behavior traits and qualities are things that can hurt your success with women and your friendships: This only makes you look insensitive, immature, and childish and many take offense to it. I took my kid to the park one time and I was with my then girlfriend Samantha. Not only was she not impressed, but she was hoping he missed one and fell so she could laugh at him for showing off. Negativity should be like the static on an old radio. Dial past that stuff until you get to something you want to listen to. I got more money than I can count! She laughed in the poor guys face and told him he was lame for doing that. Those expensive jeans and shirt are sweet. This only makes you look incredibly stuck up or look like a liar. He follows the latest trends to the T. Recognize any of these things in your own life or behavior? If so, knock it off as soon as you can. I did a lot of this stupid stuff before I learned how to get better with women and dating. But once I became aware of it, I developed a high level of self-awareness and worked on it until my behavior improved. It not only helped my dating life, but my social life as well. So what can you do to become the cool dude who everyone wants to be around? Caring about what people think, especially women, makes you totally uncool and unattractive. The coolest guys I know keep their composure and are relaxed in the craziest situations. Look at Matthew McConaughey. Watch his interviews as well as George Clooney. Super laid back dude 4 Not being needy. Nothing physical or emotional. Not using reckless behavior to look like a rebel or tough guy. It looks kinda lame when you really think about it. Having yourself together mentally, physically, and emotionally is pretty damn cool. Learn everything you can about becoming a well-rounded man and improve in every area possible. Treat everyone as an equal. Even those beneath you. Treating others as above you, especially women, makes you look like a pussy. Treating others as beneath you makes you look like a prick who people hate being around. Watch a ton of stand-up comedy. Forget about yourself for a few minutes, or hours. The return on investment is incredible because that person now really likes you and wants to be your friend and be in your life. Always have something good to say. Train yourself to see opportunity instead of failure. Wash your stinky ass, armpits, etc. Wear cologne, brush your teeth, trim your nails, keep your hair decent, etc. Look like you give a damn about yourself. Talk less, listen more, and carry yourself with confidence. Women are bullshit detecting machines and they will see right through you. Be open to the possibility that people you meet might know more than you or be smarter than you. Truly smart men are intelligent enough to know not to tell others how smart they are. Instead, they prove their brain power through actions instead of words. A cool guy is cool enough to help others when he sees they need a hand. No matter what it is. Was I too cool to help him because his pants were down? I was a man about it, did the cool thing, and gave him assistance. Make people feel good and do better just for knowing you. Get your ass off the couch and out of bed. Put the damn video games down. Stop beating off and watching porn. Write down what you want to do with your life, who you want to be, and make that shit happen! Be who you are, not who others want you to be. Get away from those influencing you and spend some time by yourself and figure out who you are. Develop your own habits, style, and way of living. Being here on MenProvement. The best are awake before everyone else. The best work harder and longer than everyone else. And as a result, the best live a life that no one else is able to live. Do it for you. Working on every one of these will ensure you have more friends, more women, and an awesome social life.

Chapter 2 : The Beach Boys - Be True To Your School Lyrics | MetroLyrics

Be True To Your School. First Drafts of Rock: "Fun, Fun, Fun" by The Beach Boys (w/Kevin Bacon) - Duration: The Tonight Show Starring Jimmy Fallon 2,, views.

Finding minimalism in a world of consumerism. On the other hand, my twin brother started on the football team, the basketball team, and the track team. He was pretty much one of the stars on each. One of my best friends was three years younger than me and lived across the street. My brother hung out with the guys three years older. A few weeks ago, I was in a local clothing store with my wife. I needed new pants something about a hole in the crotch of my old ones. It seemed like a good fit. As would be expected, we were not the only shoppers in the store. And I was not the only one using the dressing rooms. As I emerged from one of the dressing rooms wearing a khaki pair of pants, I noticed a young female shopper striking up a conversation with my wife. I think it looks a little boxy. Honestly, I just like wearing t-shirts and jeans. Spend your money on something you really love, not just the current fashion trends at parties and in the magazines. The pull towards conformity can be strong. The desire to fit in with popular culture is significant at times. And no matter how old we get, the desire to run with the cool kids can still remain. But within each of us is a desire that is even stronger—the desire to be ourselves, to embrace the things we love and enjoy and make us unique. One of the best decisions we can make is to reject the cultural expectations that shift and change with the wind. We can choose to be ourselves instead.

Chapter 3 : "Secret Millionaires Club" Be Cool to Your School (TV Episode) - Quotes - IMDb

Secret Millionaires Club - "Be Cool to Your School" TheSMCKids. Loading Unsubscribe from TheSMCKids? Cancel Unsubscribe. Working Subscribe Subscribed Unsubscribe

EMAIL Two goals every school leader can embrace are continuous improvement and wringing as much value as possible from every dollar in the budget. These two tasks do not have to be mutually exclusive. Here are 10 ways-from finding partners in higher ed to exploring free tools to reexamining staffing-that you can use to improve teaching and learning while keeping an eye on your bottom line. Establish Professional Learning Communities. Traditional professional development can be very pricey. By the time you consider speaker fees, the cost of texts, and hiring substitutes to cover classes, districts can easily spend tens or hundreds of thousands of dollars on PD initiatives. By emphasizing the establishment of a shared vision, collective learning, instructional collaboration, peer observation, and action research, PLCs create the opportunity for continuous, teacher-directed staff development. Around the country, university faculty are working to develop innovative classroom lessons, test new educational technologies, and uncover effective instructional practices. As a result, the classroom teachers [get] lesson plans, materials, and ideas they can use for years. By partnering with local university faculty and other researchers, teachers may get to pilot a new math curriculum that emphasizes social justice, try out a revolutionary iPhone application, or experiment with using videogames to enhance content area learning. In schools, a lot of the discussion about social networking focuses on how students are using or misusing popular sites like Facebook or MySpace. But social-networking sites can be incredibly useful for teachers, too. Need an idea for how to teach the popular young adult novel The Book Thief? Curious about how Second Life can enhance classroom learning? The answers to all these questions can be found online. Teachers can also join the discussions on the Classroom 2. Make Collaboration a Priority. In reality, most teachers have little time within the school day to do so. In some elementary and middle schools, for instance, all same-grade-level teachers have a common preparation time each day. At high schools, all teachers within a single department could share the same prep time. This would allow teachers to work closely with colleagues and encourage them to engage in ongoing discussions about their curriculum and how to meet the needs of each learner. In other districts, an entire half day is set aside each week for staff development, in part to help align curricula among grade levels. Manage and Share Data. The dashboard will enable school administrators to quickly review teacher performance, identify those who may need coaching, and build teacher teams more effectively. This all-in-one system for school performance management will allow administrators to better evaluate the impact and effectiveness of its plans to improve curriculum and professional development programs. The district plans to finish the prototype this year, though it will take another year to get the online dashboard running. Since many teachers are data-driven and track student performance throughout the year, the pilot has drawn much interest. Although the district recently trimmed millions of dollars from its budget— even eliminating cost-of-living allowances this year—Burbridge calls the project a top priority. Teacher quality is the top predictor of student outcomes. Use Free Digital Tools. Want to get teachers excited about using media and technology in the classroom? Take Wordle, for instance, which could be used by elementary teachers to create a highly visual word wall. Students can use these to create their own podcasts and public service announcements. New media presentation software makes it easy to combine photos, video, music, and text—check out Empressr, Animoto, and JayCut. Joe Geocaris, an English teacher at Stevenson High School in Lincolnshire, Illinois, has successfully used nings, user-created social networks, with his students. Students used the online space to post resources and ask questions of their teacher and peers. Five years ago, Bowling Green Independent Schools in Kentucky introduced a music program featuring string instruments donated by a local music foundation, says Superintendent Joe Tinius. Tinius found the money. The district also purchased equipment to clean school doormats instead of having them replaced weekly. By fall, Tinius says, the equipment will have paid for itself—while the music program continues to grow. Teachers upload their lessons for other educators to use, and they collaborate with one another to modify, improve, or update existing lessons. The district used the website as part of a pilot program.

Earlier this year, 45 teachers in its technology integration leadership program created more than 50 new lessons, uploaded them, then downloaded other lessons from the site that involved technology. It has been a great success, says Webb. Now the district is developing creative ways to expand its use of the website, focusing on specific areas that need improvement. The plan is to roll it out to teachers across the district and explore collaboration opportunities with teachers worldwide. Each inspector rotates working the midnight shift to ensure schools are properly shut down. The district expects to save the same amount this year. Several years ago, the district began using a portion of these savings to equip classrooms with PCs, printers, and whiteboards to help prepare students for 21st-century work and learning. Back in , money was tight at Fridley Public Schools, a Kâ€™12 district just north of Minneapolis that supports 2, students. One or two teachers were facing layoffs. So Superintendent Mark Robertson tried something new. He realized employing a full-time business manager and an accountant was overkill: To make matters worse, roughly five accountants had quit in six years, accepting higher-paying jobs with other districts. Robertson outsourced the positions. After one year, the company he hired had taken on too many clients, which negatively affected the quality of its work. So the two parted ways. Robertson then hired a subcontractor for each position and reduced their hours to 80 percent. The district avoided cutting 1.

Chapter 4 : What Does It Mean To Be Cool? | Issue 80 | Philosophy Now

Directed by David Elvin, Panlin Qiu. With Ogie Banks, Warren Buffett, Christine Marie Cabanos, André Gordon. When the kids fail to raise money for an important school field trip, Warren shows them that in business, and in life, there are no failures.

In principle, to be cool means to remain calm even under stress. What is cool, and why is it so cool to be cool? The aesthetics of cool developed mainly as a behavioral attitude practiced by black men in the United States at the time of slavery. Slavery made necessary the cultivation of special defense mechanisms which employed emotional detachment and irony. A cool attitude helped slaves and former slaves to cope with exploitation or simply made it possible to walk the streets at night. During slavery, and long afterwards, overt aggression by blacks was punishable by death. Provocation had to remain relatively inoffensive, and any level of serious intent had to be disguised or suppressed. So cool represents a paradoxical fusion of submission and subversion. Modern Cool Today the aesthetics of cool represents the most important phenomenon in youth culture. Facing the Past and Seizing the Future, , p. Philosophy and Race in America, , p. While several recent studies have shown that American brand names have dramatically slipped in their cool quotients worldwide, symbols of black coolness such as Hip Hop remain exportable. On the one hand, the message produced by a cool pose fascinates the world because of its inherent mysteriousness. The stylized way of offering resistance that insists more on appearance than on substance can turn cool people into untouchable objects of desire. On the other hand, to be cool can be seen as a decadent attitude leading to individual passivity and social decay. The ambiguity residing in this constellation lends the cool scheme its dynamics, but it also makes its evaluation very difficult. In spite of the ambiguity, it seems that we remain capable of distinguishing cool attitudes from uncool ones. So what is cool? Let me say that cool resists linear structures. Thus a straightforward, linear search for power is not cool. Constant loss of power is not cool either. Winning is cool; but being ready to do anything to win is not. Both moralists and totally immoral people are uncool, while people who maintain moral standards in straightforwardly immoral environments are most likely to be cool. A CEO is not cool, unless he is a reasonable risk-taker and refrains from pursuing success in a predictable fashion. Coolness is a nonconformist balance that manages to square circles and to personify paradoxes. This has been well known since at least the time of cool jazz. A president is uncool if he clings to absolute power, but becomes cooler as soon as he voluntarily concedes power in order to maintain democratic values. This does not mean that the cool person needs to be an idealist. On the contrary, very few of the coolest rappers are idealists. Idealism can be extremely uncool, as shown by the self-righteous examples of both neoDarwinists and creationists. Coolness implies the power of abstraction without becoming overly abstract. Similarly, the cool person stays close to real life without getting absorbed by it. Going with the masses is as uncool as being overly eccentric. It is not cool to take everything, nor is it cool to give everything away: For the cool, this detached style matters more than the pursuit of money, power and ideals. Classic Greek Cool In ancient Greece, the Stoic philosophers supported a vision of coolness in a turbulent world. The Stoic indifference to fate can be interpreted as the supreme principle of coolness, and has even been viewed as such in the context of African American culture. The style of the jazz musician Lester Young, for example, was credible mostly because Young was neither proud nor ashamed. This is a Stoic attitude. What depends upon us are our impulses, passions, attitudes, opinions, desires, beliefs and judgments. These things we must improve. Everything that cannot be controlled by us — death, the actions of others, or the past, for examples — should leave us indifferent. Stoics have been criticized for being deterministic and fatalistic. As a matter of fact, we find in this materialist and rationalist philosophy the same spectrum of problems that are linked with coolness, because the Stoic, just like the Cool, has to continually decide what is up to him and what is not. In as far as his indifference extends to areas of life that are within his power because he wrongly believes them to be outside his power, the result will be fatalism, decadence and alienation. Yet should he decide to care about things he believes to be within his power although they are not he loses his coolness. Once again, coolness is a matter of balance; or more precisely, of negotiating a way to survive in a paradoxical condition. All this is why losing and still keeping a straight face is probably the coolest behavior one can imagine. Living With the Paradox of Cool Coolness is control; but the dictator who controls everything is not cool because he does not balance a paradox. The self-control of cool black behavior in and before the s, on the other hand, is immediately linked to the African American inability to control political and cultural oppression. This paradox of the need for self-control in the face of a lack of control nurtured a cool attitude. Thus, instead of revelling in either total control or total detachment, the aesthetics and ethics of cool fractures and alienates in order to bring forward unusual constellations of ideas and actions.

Chapter 5 : "Secret Millionaires Club" Be Cool to Your School (TV Episode) - IMDb

Be Cool To Your School by stevhen peters, released 30 June My school's number one in the state My school's number one in the state God no one help you 'cause your school's cut rate God no one can beat us 'cause we're really great Braggarts, check my decal back Lettered in football and track When I'm in some new town know I'm feeling cool.

Lots of kids do. But what happens if you feel this way too much? School is a fact of life, and getting an education can help you build the kind of future life you want. Signs of School Stress When you worry about school, it can affect your body. A kid who feels stressed about school might have headaches or stomachaches. You might feel "butterflies" or like you have to throw up. Having trouble sleeping is also a sign of stress. Feeling tired can make your school day seem even worse. Staying home may seem like a good choice, but it just makes it harder to go to school the next day. Maybe the work is too easy and you get bored. Your mom, dad, relative, teacher, or school counselor will be able to help you. Another good idea is to write down your feelings about school in a journal. You can use a journal or diary or just write in an ordinary notebook. Teachers want and expect you to ask for help when you have trouble learning. If all of your subjects seem really hard, a school counselor can help you sort things out. Special help with schoolwork is available if you need it. Try not to let the problems go on too long. Feeling Better About School The next time you find yourself disliking school, try this: Could you find a way to show off your special interests and talents? If you made just one new friend, would you feel less alone? If you helped someone else feel less alone, would you feel even better? Which activities could you try that would help you meet new friends? A bully may not simply disappear. Reading may always be a challenge. Focus on what you can change and you might be able to put the cool back in school!

Chapter 6 : Be Cool To Your School: How Universities Use Bonfire for Fundraising

Be Cool to Your School Win a Epiphone archtop guitar or a day on the Chesapeake Bay By Asha Beh Published at PM EST on Nov 10, | Updated at PM EST on Nov 10,

November 24, at Lewis for that little nugget. You make a good point: Stop caring what people think of work past but make them remain forever curious of what will come next. November 25, at She did not care about being popular, because that required being immoral with the guys and snotty with the gals. But she sure could vault. So she hung out with the kids who were nice, and most of the guys were shorter than she is. Then one day, she decided she wanted to enter a beauty pageant she is beyond beautiful, too, really, So she worked up a talent dance thing with black lights, bought a formal gown, hired a hairdresser, and just had a blast. She won Miss Personality. Then she went on her merry way to graduate 4th in her whole class. She could write the book. I recently put up my blog at akshata. A couple of my posts got linked to on Reddit and they received a few sharp comments there were several positive ones too. I felt misunderstood, because how my post was interpreted was not how I meant it to be. Your post has made me even more determined to continue writing like I have always wanted to. I have bookmarked it and read it thrice in yesterday. I think the key to TRUE success is loving people, and caring so deeply about them that everything you do is for them. Of course, who is that awesome? But I hope to be one day. Love is not how to be cool. November 27, at

Chapter 7 : Why You Don't Need to Run with the Cool Kids

Watch TV Show Secret Millionaires Club Episode 1 - Be Cool to Your School online for Free in HD/High Quality. Cartoons are for kids and Adults! Cartoons are for kids and Adults! Our players are mobile (HTML5) friendly, responsive with ChromeCast support.

Chapter 8 : The Secret Path to Cool: What It Takes to Become the Most Popular Kid in School " Goins, V

To be cool at school, you really just need to take basic care of your appearance, be friendly and open-minded, develop your interests, and stay your normally awesome self. If you can do all of this, coolness could be easier than you ever imagined.

Chapter 9 : What to Do if You Don't Like School

Even if your school doesn't allow hats to be worn in the building, you can still look cool before and after school with a hat. Guys can sport a backwards baseball cap while girls flex a visor or stylish cap.