If you write a bibliography by hand, you should still underline the names of publications. But, if you use a computer, then publication names should be in italics as they are below. Always check with your instructor regarding their preference of using italics or underlining.

Below are standard formats and examples for basic bibliographic information recommended by the American Psychological Association APA. For more information on the APA format, see http: Basics Your list of works cited should begin at the end of the paper on a new page with the centered title, References. Only the initials of the first and middle names are given. For dates, spell out the names of months in the text of your paper, but abbreviate them in the list of works cited, except for May, June, and July. Use either the day-month-year style 22 July or the month-day-year style July 22, and be consistent. With the month-day-year style, be sure to add a comma after the year unless another punctuation mark goes there. When reports were written on typewriters, the names of publications were underlined because most typewriters had no way to print italics. If you write a bibliography by hand, you should still underline the names of publications. But, if you use a computer, then publication names should be in italics as they are below. Always check with your instructor regarding their preference of using italics or underlining. Our examples use italics. Capitalization, Abbreviation, and Punctuation The APA guidelines specify using sentence-style capitalization for the titles of books or articles, so you should capitalize only the first word of a title and subtitle. How to Write a Bibliography for a Research Paper Writing a bibliography is easy by following the format outlined in this article. Learn how to properly cite different resources in the bibliography of a research paper, and how to format those citations, for books, encyclopedias, films, websites, and people.

Make sure that titles in APA citations are properly capitalized. Capitalize only the first letter of the first word or any proper nouns. APA stands for the American Psychological Association , which is an organization that focuses on psychology. They are responsible for creating this specific citation style. The APA is not associated with this guide, but all of the information here provides guidance to using their style. What is APA Citing? This citation style is used by many scholars and researchers in the behavioral and social sciences, not just psychology. There are other citation formats and styles such as MLA and Chicago, but this one is most popular in the science fields. Following the same standard format for citations allows readers to understand the types of sources used in a project and also understand their components. It outlines proper ways to organize and structure a research paper, explains grammar guidelines, and how to properly cite sources. For more information, please consult the official Publication Manual of the American Psychological Association, 6th ed. We cite sources for many reasons. One reason is to give credit to the authors of the work you used to help you with your own research. This is one way to prevent plagiarism. Another reason why we create citations is to provide a standard way for others to understand and possibly explore the sources we used. To learn more about citations, check out this page on crediting work. Also, read up on how to be careful of plagiarism. What does it look like? There are two types of citations. In-text citations are found in the body of the project and are used when adding a direct quote or paraphrase into your work. Reference citations are found in the reference list, which is at the end of the assignment and includes the full citations of all sources used in a project. Depending on the types of sources you used for your project, the structure for each citation may look different. There is a certain format, or structure, for books, a different one for journal articles, a different one for websites, and so on. Scroll down to find the appropriate citation structure for your sources. Even though the structure varies across different sources, see below for a full explanation of in-text citations and reference citations. When using a direct quote or paraphrasing information from a source, include an in-text citation in the body of your project, immediately following it. In-text citations may look something like this: Full Citations Overview Each source used to help with the gathering of information for your project is listed as a full citation in the reference list, which is usually the last part of a project. The structure for each citation is based on the type of source used. Scroll down to see examples of some common source formats. Most citations include the following pieces of information, commonly in this order: Last name, First initial. End this information with a period. In an APA citation, include all authors shown on a source. Our free citation creator will format the authors in the order in which you add them. If your reference list has multiple authors with the same last name and initials, include their first name in brackets. When no author is listed, exclude the author information and start the citation with the title followed by the year in parentheses. When citing an entire edited book, place the names of editors in the author position and follow it with Ed. See below for examples of citing edited books in their entirety and also chapters in edited books. How to Structure Publication Dates: Place the date that the source was published in parentheses after the name of the author. For periodicals, include the month and day as well. If no date is available, place n. How to Structure the Title: Only capitalize the first letter of the first word in the title and the same for the subtitle. Capitalize the first letter for any proper nouns as well. Place this information in italics. End it with a period. Gone with the wind. For articles and chapter titles: Do not italicize the title or place it in quotation marks. The correlation between school libraries and test scores: For magazine, journal, and newspaper titles: Write the title in capitalization form, with each important word starting with a capital letter. The Boston Globe If you believe that it will help the reader to understand the type of source, such as a brochure, lecture notes, or an audio podcast, place a description in brackets directly after the title. Only capitalize the first letter. A state of trance [Audio file]. Abbreviate the state name using the two-letter abbreviation. Place a colon after the location. For journals, magazines,

BibMe Free Bibliography & Citation Maker - MLA, APA, Chicago, Harvard.

In the 12th century, the word started being used for "the intellectual activity of composing books". The 17th century then saw the emergence of the modern meaning, that of description of books. Bibliographers are interested in comparing versions of texts to each other rather than in interpreting their meaning or assessing their significance. It was established by a Belgian, named Paul Otlet, who was the founder of the field of documentation, as a branch of the information sciences, who wrote about "the science of bibliography. These two distinct concepts and practices have separate rationales and serve differing purposes. Innovators and originators in the field include W. He refers to descriptive bibliography as the systematic description of a book as a material or physical artifact. It is the preliminary phase of bibliographic description and provides the vocabulary, principles and techniques of analysis that descriptive bibliographers apply and on which they base their descriptive practice. Descriptive bibliographers follow specific conventions and associated classification in their description. Titles and title pages are transcribed in a quasi-facsimile style and representation. Illustration, typeface, binding, paper, and all physical elements related to identifying a book follow formulaic conventions, as Bowers established in his foundational opus, The Principles of Bibliographic Description. The thought expressed in this book expands substantively on W. In addition to viewing bibliographic study as being composed of four interdependent approaches enumerative, descriptive, analytical, and textual, Bowers notes two further subcategories of research, namely historical bibliography and aesthetic bibliography. McKenzie extended previous notions of bibliography as set forth by W. Greg, Bowers, Gaskell and Tanselle. He describes the nature of bibliography as "the discipline that studies texts as recorded forms, and the processes of their transmission, including their production and reception" This concept broadens the scope of bibliography to include "non-book texts" and an accounting for their material form and structure, as well as textual variations, technical and production processes that bring sociocultural context and effects into play. Bibliography, generally, concerns the material conditions of books [as well as other texts] how they are designed, edited, printed, circulated, reprinted, collected. Now, both categories of bibliography cover works in other media including audio recordings, motion pictures and videos, graphic objects, databases, CD-ROMs [14] and websites. Enumerative bibliography[edit] Bibliographer workplace in Russia An enumerative bibliography is a systematic list of books and other works such as journal articles. Bibliographies range from "works cited" lists at the end of books and articles, to complete and independent publications. As separate works, they may be in bound volumes such as those shown on the right, or computerized bibliographic databases. A library catalog, while not referred to as a "bibliography," is bibliographic in nature. Bibliographical works are almost always considered to be tertiary sources. Enumerative bibliographies are based on a unifying principle such as creator, subject, date, topic or other characteristic. An entry in an enumerative bibliography provides the core elements of a text resource including a title, the creator's, publication date and place of publication. The enumerative list may be comprehensive or selective. A more common and particular instance of an enumerative bibliography relates to specific sources used or considered in preparing a scholarly paper or academic term paper. An entry for a book in a bibliography usually contains the following elements:

He reorganized several major railroads and consolidated the United States Steel , International Harvester, and General Electric corporations. He began his career in as an accountant with the New York banking firm of Duncan, Sherman and Company, which was the American representative of the London firm George Peabody and Company. During 1871 he was a member of the firm of Dabney, Morgan and Company, and in he became a partner in the New York City firm of Drexel, Morgan and Company, which soon became the predominant source of U. This firm was reorganized as J. Because of his links with the Peabody firm, Morgan had intimate and highly useful connections with the London financial world, and during the s he was thereby able to provide the rapidly growing industrial corporations of the United States with much-needed capital from British bankers. He began reorganizing railroads in , when he arranged an agreement between two of the largest railroads in the country, the New York Central Railroad and the Pennsylvania Railroad , that minimized a potentially destructive rate war and rail-line competition between them. In he reorganized two more major railroads with the aim of stabilizing their financial base. In the course of these corporate restructurings, Morgan became a member of the board of directors of these and other railroads, thereby amassing great influence on them. Between and he extended his influence to lines based in Pennsylvania and Ohio, and after the financial panic of he was called upon to rehabilitate a large number of the leading rail lines in the country, including the Southern Railroad, the Erie Railroad , and the Northern Pacific. He helped to achieve railroad rate stability and discouraged overly chaotic competition in the East. During the depression that followed the panic of , Morgan formed a syndicate that resupplied the U. Three years later he began financing a series of giant industrial consolidations that were to reshape the corporate structure of the American manufacturing sector. His first venture, in , was to arrange the merger of Edison General Electric and Thomson-Houston Electric Company to form General Electric, which became the dominant electrical-equipment manufacturing firm in the United States. In Morgan brought together several of the leading agricultural-equipment manufacturers to form the International Harvester Company. In that same year he organized, with less subsequent success, the International Mercantile Marine IMM , an amalgamation of a majority of the transatlantic shipping lines, notably including White Star. The ship subsequently sank with great loss of life. He headed a group of bankers who took in large government deposits and decided how the money was to be used for purposes of financial relief, thereby preserving the solvency of many major banks and corporations. Having ceased to undertake large industrial reorganizations, Morgan thereafter concentrated on amassing control of various banks and insurance companies. This earned Morgan the occasional distrust of the federal government and the enmity of reformers and muckrakers throughout the country, but he remained the dominant figure in American capitalism until his death in Morgan was one of the greatest art and book collectors of his day, and he donated many works of art to the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City.
