I realized that I could see six picture calendars from where I was sitting in the kitchen [featuring] horses, barns, lighthouses, bluebirds, and wildflowers. But practical items that are also decorative are another story. Popular among Amish are calendar images of nature, outdoor scenes, and animals. These may be photos, paintings, or drawings. Keith James, who works closely with Amish craftsmen in the Midwest, discussed the prevalence of calendars in Amish homes: I have a pair of photos I took during my recent visit. In the first photo you can see the dining room table and there are three calendars visible. I turned around on the spot to take the next photo of the adjoining kitchen area, in which you can see another photo. At least one of the calendars is from us, featuring nature scenes from California. The others are either nature-related or feature horses. They list the birthdays of the most immediate family members. I took a photo of one from my March trip that has birthdays listed. The second is of a more traditional style, in a wooden display frame. What about calendars featuring photos of Amish people? Visiting with my brother who is Amish, he pulled out one of those Amish picture calendars by Doyle Yoder and asked me if I could pick him out in a barn-raising photo. Which I then did. You may think they would all be offended by the photos, but they will buy the calendar for the photos, and then not hang it up. The same thing applies in magazine photos. Offended people would not cluster around to see themselves in photos. Clearly they enjoy those great pictures of themselves, but not on an official level. Here in Lancaster County, PA, vintage picture calendars command high prices at Amish household auctions because Amish bidders compete for them like fine art objects. It is often the Amish men who bid on these colorful calendars, so the antique calendars with hunting scenes or wildlife images often sell for big bucks. So if you have a calendar published by Winchester Rifle Company, sell it to an Amishman. It will make him very happy! Kristen shared the following on calendars in one of the most traditional Amish communities: We were at the Ethridge, TN settlement yesterday and my son asked about the plain calendar hanging in an Amish workshop. He said it got so hard to find plain calendars that he finally asked his local bank to have them made especially for the Amish. So the bank produces these special calendars with a few word-only ads, but no pictures. Thanks to all the readers whose calendar comments helped put this post together today. The calendars I noticed came from a local grain elevator with farm scenery. The wooden calendar holder that says Home Sweet Home is very pretty. The picture is so tranquil. I feel myself relaxing already. Reply to Comment Comment on Call for calendars April 4th, at Will cell phone calendars someday replace wall calendars? That does look like a Doyle Yoder photo now that you mention it. Love the wood framed calendar. Linda, I think the wall calendars have already gone by the wayside. I use to get so many free from businesses that I threw them away. Now you have to buy them. I guess in farm country they are more prevalent. The perpetual calendar was not Amish made. It was Curtis made. I made this after I retired. I could still stand without a walker, then. When I moved to Florida in Mark wanted it so it is now at his house. Mark sends for the calendar from Holmes County. He usually gets several. Some get sent as Christmas presents, even overseas to Switzerland, England, and Germany. I should have asked Mark how many he had though I just remember seeing the two. I only have one, hanging up anyway. However, a calendar is a useful, practical, item that can also add some color and interest to a room and is acceptable to most Amish. Since it is acceptable and also pretty, calendars get hung in just about every room in the house. I love perpetual calendars; my brother has a perpetual Advent calendar; it has two small wooden blocks, each printed with numbers on the various faces, held up by a miniature wooden nutcracker doll. I really wanted to buy one, but figured ok, I have more than enough kitchen towels AND enough calendars already lol " maybe a good Christmas gift for someone or for me haha! I think I may try to find one of those calendar frames; you know, now that I think about it, my grandparents may have had one in their kitchen. And I like those keys hanging from the pegs at the bottom of the frame! Reply to Comment Comment on calendars April 4th, at I call them linen calendars. Anyway, I have kept them all. I would like to have someone make a quilt out of them. They can be found in the catalogs that are always

In we moved to the country, where beautiful birds were plentiful. Oh, I think once I had spotted one perching on a fencepost in the yard for about three seconds before he flew off, but that was the full extent of my contact with them. Then in the fall of , I decided to install a heated birdbath in my little bird feeding sanctuary. But it does keep the water from freezing solid, and allows the birds to drink, and to bathe when the temperatures allow it. Birds actually stay warmer if they bathe in the winter whenever possible, because a clean feather is a better insulator than a dirty feather. There were about a dozen birds sitting in a ring around the birdbath. I blinked, rubbed my eyes, ran to get my glasses and looked again, and there they were, Bluebirds! During the following weeks, I spotted them there a few more times. A House Wren couple inhabited the nestbox that year. During the winter of , a friend of mine gave me two more nestboxes that he had made, and in the spring I mounted both of those " again, in trees. That spring we did have a Bluebird couple visit and decide to make our yard their home. When I eventually did some research on Bluebirds, I was horrified to find that my efforts to help the birds might actually have endangered them. With the help of some members of the bluebird community, I created a flyer for bluebird enthusiasts to use in spreading the word about bluebird conservation in their neighborhoods and made it available as a free download on both websites. The message board still draws many visitors each nesting season, and my moderators and I pride ourselves on making the forum a very friendly, welcoming place for both newcomers and seasoned bluebird veterans. Thank to all who so generously participated in this campaign. One of my most interesting projects was the quest to come up with a new design for a mealworm feeder. That story is told on my Bluebird Nut Feeder page. I enjoy putting an attractive face on the excellent content provided by Judy Derry and all the contributors. Many thanks to the Awards Committee for this honor! They all share my affection for the birds that inhabit our backyard habitat every year. I will be adding photos to subsequent Photo pages " from my own collection, and those of others.
