Chapter 1 : www.nxgvision.com - Kate Loves a Mystery Episode Summaries

Three episodes of the short-lived spin off MRS. COLUMBO (only 13 episodes) were included as part of the COLUMBO series DVD releases, with no actual connection to its celebrated predecessor, and all references to Peter Falk's character quickly dropped.

Do you remember when Mrs. Are we familiar with some of his family members? Often Columbo mentions Mrs. However, at the end of the show it was revealed to the killer that the photos were of someone else and not of Mrs. In a couple of other shows it was revealed that Mrs. Family celebrations were said to be very important to Mrs. She also was quite busy with her Church, volunteered at the hospital, helped her sister with her children and walked the family dog. Columbo himself was born and raised near Chinatown. It is said he grew up eating as much Chinese food as Italian. The Columbo household consisted of his grandfather, parents, 5 brothers and a sister. Columbo was one of the middle children. He wore glasses, loved Reggiano cheese and taught his son to play pool. Grandfather is said to have made wine in the basement and would let Columbo stomp the grapes. As a younger man grandfather worked as a tail gunner on a beer truck during Probation. Columbo had a least one brother George who was short and at one time owned an auto repair shop in the Valley. Did George do all this? Doubt it, but who knows. Columbo had several sisters, at least three, Rachael, Ruth and Rita. She also had several nieces and nephews and cousins. In Rest In Peace Mrs. Columbo he said they never had any children. In another show he needed a babysitter. In still another show he says he went on a picnic with his wife and kid. Maybe in the beginning of the shows he and the Mrs. Whatever the family situations, the Columbo shows offered us many hours of pleasure. We all enjoyed his ability to outfox the criminals who thought because of his appearance and bumbling ways he was stupid.. There was a later spin off of the Columbo show called Mrs. In this TV show her first name was Kate. The show did refer to the fact that her husband was a police lieutenant, but Columbo was never seen. The program was not very well received and only lasted 13 episodes. A couple other shows were tried as spin offs of the Mrs Columbo show, but non were successful.

The story behind MRS. As for why, that depends on who you are asking. Let the confusion begin! Another view was NBC no longer wanted the series. It was the s, a decade when the name Fred Silverman meant genius TV programmer. Silverman had run CBS while it was number one in the ratings. NBC hired Silverman in with hopes Freddie could go three for three. A script was written, but the problem was who would play Mrs. Silverman had turned ABC around by aiming its programs at the younger audience. So it was no surprise he preferred a younger actress. And that is why the series was doomed. Silverman never understood the magic of Mrs. NBC would air the mini-series pilot during the mid-season then decide if it wanted to add MRS. The inverted mystery where we know the killer and the drama is watching the detective catch the killer is one of the hardest forms of television drama to write. The premise was not a bad one – a young mother tries to raise her child while her cop husband is always off screen. To fill her time she writes for a local throwaway newspaper and solves murders. But for the wife of our hero Lt. Columbo this was a terrible idea. The addition of the daughter ruined our view of the fun-loving marriage between two independent adults with their own lives but still devoted to the other. Not surprisingly the audience was curious and eager to see the mysterious wife of its favorite detective. Robert Culp played a brilliant defense lawyer with a problem. A divorce would destroy her, so he asks a killer he saved from a murder charge to kill his wife. Columbo had installed a new intercom system that picks up the intercom of an unknown neighbor guess who. All of the episodes of the mini-series are currently on YouTube minus opening themes and closing credits. This was not the Mrs. Columbo they knew and loved. Beyond the fans feelings of disappointment and betrayal was the fact the show was not very good. The audience had tried and rejected MRS. And now the farce truly began. The mini-series pilot had ended. It was unlikely MRS. But NBC was desperate for programs to fill its upcoming fall Schedule. Why NBC reminded everyone of the mini-series hated by so many is probably the same reason NBC was in such ratings trouble. NBC continued down it epic path of self-destruction. The promos can be seen here. By now the press was having too much fun with NBC bumbling behavior to not add public ridicule to the situation. And NBC press department helped. Without on air titles and credits it is difficult to confirm what changes, if any, were made in the production staff. But changes were made to the series. Kate divorced someone whose name is never mentioned and called herself by her maiden name Callahan. She and Kate Columbo shared the same young daughter and the same boss who now ran a daily newspaper Valley Advocate. Fearless reporter Kate tries to uncover who is behind the group of housewives turned hookers and how it was connected to the murder of a women Kate knew from the PTA. How about a long pointless car chase with Kate and the cops to end the episode? Here is a link to the Variety review. But check out the NBC ads promoting the first three episodes of the mini-series pilot that left no doubt this was the Mrs. Columbo and wife of the character played by Peter Falk. Three episodes from the mini-series MRS. As you all can tell I enjoy research. This was a fun one to write.
