A job-search guideline that states that you need to keep all the details straight to ensure that you don't miss opportunities or make mistakes such as losing someone's email address or forgetting an appointment.

Proven management skills and a deep familiarity with all aspects of successful foremanship. Aiming to leverage my skills and fill the managerial role at your company. Familiarity with inspection codes and standards Expert with most hand and power tools Knowledge of OSHA construction site safety regulations Highly motivated and able to lead within a team environment. Here are three critical skills all construction workers should emphasize on their resumes: Start your resume with a Career Objective Starting out on the right foot is important, which means having a perfectly written Career Objective to start your resume. US Bureau of Labor Statistics The following example is the perfect way to capitalize on previous experience, skills and education to capture the attention of any HR Manager. This particular Career Objective stands heads and shoulders above the competition in three specific areas. These three areas include the following, pay particular attention to bolded text. Candidate lists highly relevant skills that will be required for the position applied to: A Construction Worker Professional Experience Section The next section after the career objective will be the professional experience itself. This section is where you will list skills developed as a laborer under previous employment that may be transferable to the position you are applying to. US Bureau of Labor Statistics This professional experience section is strong because the applicant quantifies their responsibilities with numbers throughout. Numbers are great resume builders, and part of the 5 Steps to Building an Unbeatable Resume. Quantified the number of locations worked in a month: Listed the size of teams worked with regularly: Mentioned areas maintained in terms of area: Quantified number of visitors served on a daily basis: Remember to list experiences that showcase your skills and abilities. An additional skills section can also be added to the end of your resume. Including Action Verbs Throughout Adding action verbs to your resume is a great way to strengthen it and make it more targeted to the position you are applying to. For even more action verb ideas, check out the list here. It is the longest in the universe.

Chapter 3 : Chapter Building Careers & Writing Resumes by Long Pham on Prezi building careers and writing resumes Securing Employment in Today's Job Market Herbert Simon's definition - "An honorable occupation with one normally takes up his/her youth with the expectation of advancement and pursues it until retirement."

There are also internship opportunities for college students or any other person looking to get more experience or add a little more to their resume. These can be found at <http://> It might sound like reading these newspapers and magazines will not do much when trying to find a job. Another good thing to do is to make your resume appealing to the specific company you are applying to. By customizing your resume with the key words that employers are looking for, it will make it stand out from all the other resumes and employers will be more likely to give you a call. Doing research on the company and industry could also come in handy here. Examples on why you are the perfect candidate for the job could be used in the customized resume or cover letter; they could be written about issues the company has to let them know how you will be able to help them with that. They could also be used to show employers how your unique skills can improve the company where they need it the most. As everyone already know, networking is a huge opportunity to meet people in the industry that you are interested in; hopefully some of the people you meet by doing this will one day be your coworkers or bosses. A great way to network, meet people and at the same time learn more about the industry is to go to conferences about that particular industry. Not many people do this, but it could be a great help for everyone. Trade shows and websites such as LinkedIn or Twitter could be used as an opportunity to network as well. As with everything, there needs to be a purpose; and this includes writing resumes. The audience needs to be analyzed here as well to make the resume as appealing to them as possible. There are two types of resumes: This type of resume describes what the person has done previously and what their responsibilities were at each of their past jobs 2 Functional Resume: For college students who may not have that much work experience, the functional resume is their best option. Instead of just listing past jobs, it gives a clear description of each of their skills and capabilities. A combination resume of these two types could also be created, that would be an advantage for everyone since it will have the best of both and it will make it look better in the eyes of the employer. You should also make you that areas of concern in the resume are addressed. If most of the jobs are within the same industry or the same type of job, it is a good idea to put them in a single group. This may not be very attractive to potential employers but you could describe any experience gained during these gaps or talk about any other types of jobs like being a volunteer. Make a list of courses you have taken that are pertinent to the industry as well as volunteer work and membership in groups also related to the job. It may not sound like it, but overqualification for a job can often be a bad thing. The best thing to do is to tone it down a bit and just talk about the skills you possess that would be helpful for the job. One of the most important things to do with a resume is to keep it honest. This will avoid any trouble in the future. It is better for employers to find out what you are capable of doing before they hire you instead of finding out later when they have given you the job that you are not as good as your resume portrayed you to be. Before handing in your resume you should go over it at least once to make sure that it is correct and that you have avoided things such as:
