Received Jan 13; Accepted Apr This article has been cited by other articles in PMC. Abstract Residents in training, medical students and other staff in surgical sector, emergency room ER and intensive care unit ICU or Burn Unit face a multitude of questions regarding burn care. Treatment of burns is not always straightforward. Furthermore, National and International guidelines differ from one region to another. On one hand, it is important to understand pathophysiology, classification of burns, surgical treatment, and the latest updates in burn science. On the other hand, the clinical situation for treating these cases needs clear guidelines to cover every single aspect during the treatment procedure. Thus, 10 questions have been organised and discussed in a step-by-step form in order to achieve the excellence of education and the optimal treatment of burn injuries in the first 24 hours. Understanding and answering the 10 questions will not only cover the management process of Burns during the first 24 hours but also seems to be an interactive clear guide for education purpose. Burn care, Burn surgery, Burn unit, Burn resuscitation, Burn care guidelines Introduction During a rotation to the emergency room ER , surgical sector or burn unit, residents under training should pay attention to the pathophysiology and classification of burns, treatment, and the latest updates in burn science including burn injury prognosis [1]. Managing burn cases in the first 24 hours represents one of the biggest challenges in burn care and will indeed reflect the degree of morbidity and mortality. Therefore, a guide for treatment during the first 24 hours can be very helpful. A lot of trusted guidelines exist regarding this point such as the American Burn Association guidelines for referral criteria to burn centres and also operation guidelines in the burn unit. This practical guide is drawn to make it easy for any trainee, medical students and staff to understand the basic principles of management that should be carried out in each burn case during the first 24 hours. This does not only mean covering of all wounds but also to bring the patient to his or her normal status including the psychological, social and of course the physical aspect. Objective This article has been primarily written for education purposes. We believe that good and clear information will indeed enhance the quality of treatment even without big facilities. The target group is any physician, surgeon, trainee in training, interns, medical students and personnel who are responsible for burn patients in surgical sector, emergency room ER and intensive care unit ICU or Burn Unit. Methods A clear guide has been structured for the above target group, which includes 10 questions that should be asked and well answered to cover the treatment of burn patients in the first 24 hours. Herein, the following questions should be taken in consideration: Does the patient meet the criteria for injuries requiring referral to the Burn Unit? How to perform the Primary Survey and Secondary Survey? What are the main aspects of Resuscitation? What are the routine interventions that should be performed for each case of burn injury during admission to the Burn Unit? What kind of laboratory tests should be done? Does the patient have Inhalation Injury and is Bronchoscopy indicated for all patients? What kind of consultations should be carried out immediately? Does the patient need Emergency Surgery or not? What kind of admission orders should be written? Furthermore, this paper does not only state a guideline to be followed but also explains every point and takes in consideration that many hospitals around the world do not have a specialised burn unit and, thus most of the treatment process occurs in the emergency room ER. Furthermore, international guidelines regarding burn treatment have been also reviewed in the literature. A clear answer should be given in the pre-hospital setting. This must be well performed by the referral person or the transporting physician. It is not meant that a patient with burn injury should immediately be moved to a burn unit. In the case of a burn centre not being able to accept a patient, the initial treatment process can also be conducted in the emergency room ER until the transport to the burn unit takes place. The main criteria for referral to a burn unit include the following [2]: Burns to face, hands, feet, genitalia, perineum and major joints. Electrical burns including lightning injury Chemical burns.
