Radar and sonar are based on similar principles. Therefore, the most suitable heading for this paragraph should be xi. Paragraph B In the first sentence the writer says: Here we should focus on the bold words to realise that the main content of the text is that the increasing demand of water has been met. Looking back at the heading list, the most suitable heading should be iii, How a global challenge was met. Paragraph C The main points in this paragraph relate to dangers to health as the result of a lack of clean water. Paragraph D In the first sentence, the writer states: Paragraph E In the first sentence, the writer says: Paragraph F In the first sentence, the writer says: So we can infer that the text is possibly going to talk about a downward trend in water demand. He then discusses two factors: In these ways, the new projects should have higher standards in order to protect local people and their environment. Therefore the most suitable heading should be x, The need to raise standards. Water use per person is higher in the industrial world than it was in Ancient Rome Keywords: Water use per person, higher, industrial world, Ancient Rome In paragraph A, the last sentence, the writer says: Feeding increasing populations is possible due primarily to improved irrigation systems. Feeding, populations, irrigation systems In paragraph B, the writer explains: Modern water systems imitate those of the ancient Greeks and Romans Keywords: Modern, imitate, ancient Greeks and Romans From these key words, it can be inferred that description of water systems could only be found in paragraph C. Whether these modern water systems copy those of ancient Greece and Rome is not stated. Industrial growth is increasing the overall demand for water Keywords: Industrial, increasing, demand for water In paragraph F, the writer argues: In fact, the demand has slowed. Modern technologies have led to a reduction in domestic water consumption Keywords:
