The online CAT preparation course offers clear explanation for all the key concepts. The study material gives ample room for practice and the mock CAT series gets you geared for the actual exam. When we started the course, we thought people might view it as a supplement. One need not use any other material for preparation. What are the technical specifications my machine needs to have for the CAT Online course to work? You will need to have an internet connection, preferably at a speed of around 1 MBPS or better. The videos load only on the Chrome browser. So, the course can only be learnt using Chrome. The simplest test to see if the specifications are met is to try loading some video from youtube on a Chrome browser. When our mobile app goes live in May, you will be able to save classes for offline viewing when your internet is stable, and learn from cached content when connectivity gets dicey. Can we view the videos more than once? Each video can be viewed any number of times. Is the "Study Material" a replica of the online course? The study material that we ship is different from the online course. The study material provides practice questions for all the topics and ideas discussed in the online course. The study material is not a replica; it is entirely different from what is provided online. How do you know this? This one is easy. Most products available are either test series, e-books or recorded classroom lectures. In our mind, none of these qualify as an online course. Any recorded video of length more than 15 minutes is more or less worthless. Research tells us that people struggle to watch even entertainment videos if they are more than 12 minutes long. Imagine that, if one struggles to watch Amitabh Bachan for 12 minutes, what are odds of watching a tutor in a 60 minute long video? We have spent an inordinate amount of time and energy in designing this course. At every stage, we have worn the hat of a student and brought in the technology that works for each specific idea. The starting point has been the student requirement, and not the technology. This is why we went down the route of using screen capture videos and not live videos. Screen capture videos de-emphasize the teacher and bring the content to the forefront. This hurts us while trying to market the product. But screen capture gives us two massive advantages - 1 Video size is small. Our videos on a per-minute basis are about one-fourth of the size of the videos on youtube. So, if you have an internet connection that lets you watch stuff of youtube you can most definitely take this course and 2 We can write equations and use a digital pen to highlight key ideas without worrying about camera focus.. How do we get our doubts clarified? Our faculty will answer it within 48 hours. You can also get them clarified by email at prep 2iim. You have disclosed the tech provider, technology and given all the information up front here. Are you not worried that someone will mimic the online CAT Course? We are very generous that way. Jokes apart, the largest value in the online CAT course sits in the pedagogy. The value lies in 1 the way we have created the course, 2 the people who have created the course and 3 the quality of the content. We have built the entire content with a team of 3 teachers. They have distilled years of teaching experience to come up with a well-thought out pedagogy that uses technology well. We have not used technology for the sake of using some fancy bits. We have found the tech pieces that the course demanded, not the other way around. That value which our teachers bring to the table cannot be replicated easily. An average class that is pegged to be covered in, say, around 2. The videos are all of minutes length and each video focuses on a separate idea. Student can get to each subsequent slide by pressing "Next" and the speed is entirely governed by the student. Apart from this, there are on an average two checkpoint quizzes per topic, each with questions. These are simple practice questions to help consolidate the idea. For these also, detailed slide-deck presentations are available, but the student has the option of skipping these if she is comfortable with the question. Beyond this, there is a timed Prep-Edge quiz that gives questions at the level of difficulty seen in CAT. These also come with detailed slide-deck solutions. Some of the trickier ones have video solutions as well. Student can choose to skip the solution, rush through the slides, or listen to the videos. Since we give so much choice over picking the medium for the student, the flexibility over speed is established. If done this way, the time taken would be around 5 hours for the class. Someone who has taken CAT before and knows most of the basics can rush through the slides, listen in on the 4 most critical videos, speed through the checkpoint quizzes and focus on taking the Prep Edge quizzes with utmost seriousness. The flexibility over speed is particularly useful while revisiting a topic. You can directly zone in on the topics and questions that you want to revisit, see 3 key videos and be done with the topic. Some of our students have been absolutely thrilled with the pace at which one can revise with the online product. Till what date is the online CAT course valid? Any student wishing to extend the duration of the course can contact us at Any upgrades or additions we do the course will be available to everyone. Which is better - pre-uploaded classes or "Live" ones? This is a no-brainer. Pre-uploaded ones are way better than live classes. No freedom over time or pace. The only advantage is that you can tune in from home. You can send your doubts across by email and they will get clarified later. But they will not be clarified at that moment. We just could not wind our heads around why live classes would be better. Live classes are bad for the students. They are no more than a marketing gimmick. We want to teach an idea "just right". We agonize over every detail as far as the pedagogy is concerned. A live one-on-one class is a different scenario altogether. If you can get live one-on-one class from someone who is an excellent teacher that is a great proposition. What is the size of the videos? Can we watch it with even a 1MBPs connection? As we have mentioned elsewhere in this section, our videos on a per-minute basis are about one-fourth of the size of the videos on youtube. So, if you have an internet connection that lets you watch stuff of youtube you can most definitely take this course. Screen capture technology gives us the option of keeping video length short. This is why we have built the entire content on this model. What technology have you used for the videos? As far as the online CAT Course is concerned, we have used screen-capture technology for most parts. For recording the videos, we work with a Software called as Blueberry; an alternative Software called Camtasia is also pretty good. Our online tech platform provider is Learnyst. They might use some hi-funda technology to create the platform, but they created a simple enough interface for us to use.
