Early life[ edit ] Boyd was born and raised in Slidell, Louisiana , a small town not far from New Orleans. His mother is an elementary school teacher, who left the family when Boyd was eleven. His father is the owner of a construction company and left Blake to his own devices from his teenage years onward. At the age of sixteen Boyd started to paint, with the ambition of showing professionally, and began his apprenticeship with an established local artist. Boyd had to drop out of Memphis College of Art in for financial reasons and continued his apprenticeship until Hollywood[ edit ] In the summer of his sixteenth year Boyd took the money from his garage sale and flew to Los Angeles to be discovered for film. There he met, and photographed, another of his heroes, Johnny Carson. Afraid of the Ground Man. The character referenced Andy Warhol creating a robot of himself. Blake created Andy Clone to continue Warhol into the 21st century. In the summer of , no longer with a specific gallery, Boyd conceived and produced Prospect 1. This took place over a five-month period at four locations throughout New Orleans. Actor Jennifer Coolidge was the main curator and invited guest curators for some of the venues. His art takes many forms, including paintings in clay, sculpture, photobooth photography, video, and site-specific installation. Collectively, all of these are components of a twenty-year conceptual artwork that Boyd views as two "visual" operas. The second opera, Romantika, is inspired by and dedicated to a hometown love interest, whom Boyd credits with mending his broken heart. Since Boyd has exhibited smaller installations, Chamber Music, whose themes complement and support the opera. His apprenticeship that same year introduced him to the pre-Renaissance technique of water gilding. Boyd uses his skill with the historic technique to reinterpret present-day icons and themes in an unfamiliar scale and setting to tell a story through their associations. The traditional medium also evokes reference to religious iconography and calls into question contemporary values. Photography[ edit ] Boyd has improved his technique since , learning from his mentors Andres Serrano and Billy Name. His first portraits were taken using the strip photobooth machines and, following the disappearance of the chemical based equipment, he has been using a Polaroid Macro 5 SLR camera with Polaroid film. This medium has also died out. In the mid-Nineties he conceived and pursued a photobooth opus in three parts. Both of the Warhol Superstar series were staged in local public photoboos New Orleans and Slidell and achieved by costuming Mead and Name as actual pop characters, as in the Warhol silk-screens, with references to the Warhol films in which the two had performed. Boyd lived in London in and spent two months using public photoboos, mostly at tube stations, to take portraits of people from the streets. A selection from the Billy Name series was published in Lid magazine, issue thirteen, A fan of Stanley Kubrick , he is inspired by the documentary research that the director prepared for his films. The first significant documentary portrait series, Louisiana Cereal, was initiated as a desire to present an important, historical art exhibit recording the positive life force of the region post- Hurricane Katrina and the Deepwater Horizon oil spill , capturing the spirit of New Orleans and Louisiana. Boyd continues to record the personalities from and associated with his home state, and the collection has become a contemporary history of Louisiana. Honore , and actor Patricia Clarkson. He was introduced to the tremendous fraternity that exists across the US with these specialists and conceived of a project to acknowledge and pay homage to their service. Francisville, when Boyd photographed him for the Louisiana Cereal project. This visit brought an even greater appreciation of the historic significance of Angola and the unique cycle of life there, warranting a broader, dedicated documentation. The theme of portraits celebrities and individuals made up to speak about this issue developed into a cross -country project. Boyd travelled across the United States with special effects make-up artists to document around people as zombies weaving their fates together through a conceptual narrative referencing The Shining , Shaun of the Dead , the writings of Hunter S. The storyline features several of the more well-known models tying their fates together through front page headlines , a water color illustrated journal and a series of oversize painted portraits. Taylor

Mead[ edit ] Influenced by the Factory and actor troupes, Boyd uses many recurring characters in his projects such as Harry Shearer and Holly Woodlawn. Documenting Anger in surviving chemical photoboosts, with Polaroid and Fuji Instax and working on collaborative projects. They share the same interest in Disney and the Occult. Boyd visited this personal "mecca" every year until he was a teenager himself. His paintings reinterpret the Disney images drawn from nineteenth century European fairytales. The depiction of characters such as Pinocchio , Alice in Wonderland , and Snow White , in the medieval medium of water gilding, acknowledges them as contemporary Icons. The gallery showcases regional and national contemporary art and offers an alternative space for national and international artists to create or curate site specific projects.

Boyd says going to Iowa was a decision he "wouldn't change for the world." He lived up to his reputation as a 3-point shooter, making 3s to still rank No. 7 on Iowa's career list.

Greasy Bend, modern-day Boyd, was where early settlers fattened their hogs on native pecans. Parkhurst was not mentioned again. The town was changed from Parkhurst to Boyd because Park Springs, just four stops away, was too similar to Parkhurst, and officials feared confusion. Since Parkhurst was the younger town, it had to change. The name was changed to Boyd at some point between June 3 and July 15. There are two different theories about who Boyd is named for. Boyd, an early railroad official. Research revealed no railroad official named H. Boyd during the time of these events. Boyd, first assistant general ticket and passenger agent; and E. Boyd, second assistant general freight agent. Both were in Chicago. Research revealed no one named Parkhurst, either. As to the second theory, there are many Boyds in the history of this area. A likely candidate is Jesse A. Jesse Boyd was 2 years old in , when he came to Wise County with his parents. Jesse and his two brothers worked land set aside for them by their father. His brothers left the area, but Jesse stayed, retiring to Boyd itself in . Boyd died March 10, . It would be nice to think that Boyd was named for a local citizen. But, without further evidence, I have a feeling the railroad probably won. They probably picked the new name without regard to the citizens. Whoever Boyd was, he was next in line after Parkhurst to get a town named after him. As of March 24, , all posted comments will include the users full name.
