That will do much to put out the flame of Anger and Outrage and we will then be able to bring all sides together in Peace and Harmony. Fake News Must End! The reason, according to Donald Trump, that we have "anger" and "Outrage" in this country, and that he is not able to "bring all sides together in Peace and Harmony," is because the media reports fake stories. There are a lot of things wrong with this logic and these tweets -- both factually and morally. Here are a few: The shooter in the Pittsburgh synagogue was inspired to commit his heinous act by the false storyline that liberal billionaire George Soros was providing the financial backing for the caravan. The mainstream media repeatedly debunked this ridiculous claim and called it for what it is: News that is bad for him. How do I know? Because he tweeted about it! Why do we work so hard in working with the media when it is corrupt? This is about Trump believing the media is not being nice enough to him. The irony is suffocating. He loves the media. His Twitter feed, his interviews, his back-and-forths with reporters all make clear how much of an avid consumer of the mainstream media he is. He spends hours a day watching TV and tweeting about it. But he also knows that his Republican base hates the media. And that, with just eight days before the midterm elections, attacking the media for the awful events -- including some that have directly targeted the media -- will work to rev up that base. And a revved-up base could lessen the blow from what looks to be a very difficult election. A political one designed to wring advantage out of this situation. And that -- and this is VERY important to think about -- is the fundamental difference between Trump as President and every person who came before him as president: He has zero belief in the notion of the president as a moral leader in the country. But past presidents saw the growing partisan divide -- and tendency to label those with whom you disagree as morally bankrupt or evil -- as a problem that they, as president, could try to solve by dint of their own moral leadership. Trump, from the moment he became a candidate for president back on , saw the polarization in the country as an opportunity to exploit. He is someone who sees himself as a victim in nearly every circumstance, someone who is always being persecuted by outside forces who are out to get him because they hate his success. He is someone who views everything -- absolutely everything -- from the perspective of a What does this mean for me? Those twin realities virtually ensure that when moments like the white supremacist violence in Charlottesville happen, Trump reacts with his "both sides" do bad things response. Or that when a series of women come out alleging that Roy Moore pursued relationships with them as teenagers and, in some cases, assaulted them, Trump will first throw his hands up and insist no judgment is possible. Ditto the allegations of domestic abuse against former White House staff secretary Rob Porter. If you are a supporter of his or someone who has said nice things he will bend over backward to find ways to absolve you. If you oppose him politically, then everything you do will be cast as in service of a lie or a falsehood. You can agree or disagree with the policies of Barack Obama or George W. Bush or Bill Clinton or George H. Bush or Ronald Reagan or Jimmy Carter. And lots and lots of people did -- and do. Trump does not see the presidency that way.

Change management as it is traditionally applied is outdated. We know, for example, that 70 percent of change programs fail to achieve their goals, largely due to employee resistance and lack of management support.

Just days before open enrollment begins for , Obamacare is looking a lot healthier than it did at this time last year. Enrollees generally will have more choices and see lower rates on the exchanges. Obamacare has proven resilient despite efforts by President Donald Trump and Republicans in Congress to undermine it after failing to repeal the landmark health reform law. Enrollment held up better than expected for -- nearly Obamacare sign ups remained strong in , but next year is uncertain Yet, while Congress is no longer actively trying to roll back the law, the Trump administration has made many moves over the past 21 months that could have an impact on the program. The key questions are how the elimination of the individual mandate penalty and the introduction of alternative health care options, such as short-term plans, will affect enrollment for Read More Americans can start signing up on Thursday, with open enrollment running through Dec. Some states that operate their own exchanges are extending enrollment as long as until January Here are four ways the Affordable Care Act is changing for For the first time since the exchanges opened in , the average rate for the benchmark silver plan will dip. These prices are for policies sold to year-olds shopping on the federal exchange, which handles enrollment for 39 states. The rate changes vary widely depending on the state. Some will see even bigger drops for the benchmark plan, upon which premium subsidies are based. On average, premiums are dropping a bit or staying flat in many parts of the country. States that run their own exchanges are also enjoying declines or more restrained premium increases. In Pennsylvania, rates will fall 2. Obamacare premiums will get cheaper for the first time While the Trump administration is taking credit for stabilizing the Affordable Care Act, industry experts say insurers are holding the line on rates largely because they raised them so much a year ago in response to the uncertainty emanating from Washington over the future of the repeal effort. Many insurers are breaking even or have started making a profit in the individual market after several years of racking up hundreds of millions of dollars in losses. Also, several states have also taken steps -- with the approval of the Trump administration -- to insulate insurers from high-cost enrollees. Still, premiums could have dropped even more across the board without changes made by the Trump administration, according to a Kaiser Family Foundation analysis. One benefit of the rate hike for plans was that federal premium assistance jumped too. That meant that many consumers could use the extra help to buy gold-level plans or to reduce the price of bronze policies to very little -- or in some cases, nothing. Consumers will have more options: Those shopping on the exchanges will find more insurers and choices of Obamacare plans for Companies -- from titans like Anthem to start ups like Oscar and Bright Health -- are returning to the marketplaces because they see an opportunity to make money on the exchanges, experts said. This is a big change from the last two years, when red ink and political uncertainty spurred many carriers to jump ship. But enrollees will get less guidance: Several states, including Iowa and Montana, will have no navigators, while their presence in Texas, New Jersey and several other states will be limited. Instead, Trump officials are pushing people to sites operated by insurers or web brokers, broadening the use of direct enrollment sites. Consumer advocates, however, worry that these channels may not provide consumers with all the Obamacare choices available to them. The Trump administration justified the budget cuts last year by saying it was basing advertising on effectiveness and performance. States that run their own exchanges, however, will continue to pour money into marketing. Some are trying new strategies:
