But I am a recent convert to the world of podcasts. Coffee Break Spanish and Notes in Spanish. Both of these podcasts offer extra material like transcripts and worksheets for sale, but the podcasts themselves are free to stream online or download to your computer in MP3 form. There are 80 episodes in the series, each lasting somewhere around 15 minutes. I really enjoyed listening to Marc the teacher and Kara the student. Of course, not being Spanish, I might be wrong! Coffee Break Spanish was the very first resource that I started using when I decided that I wanted to learn Spanish a few months ago. I repeated words and sentences out loud until I felt comfortable with them. I really enjoyed the pace at first – the podcasts are short and engaging, and progress nicely for beginners. I do think that if someone were just using this podcast to casually pick up some Spanish before travelling, it would be well worth continuing through to episode 80. Is it worth listening to Coffee Break Spanish? It helps build your confidence by introducing new concepts slowly and in a logical order. I really enjoyed the ones that I listened to, though! Podcast for Intermediate Learners: Notes in Spanish Notes in Spanish offers three levels of free podcasts: I chose to start with the intermediate version of Notes in Spanish. This podcast by husband-and-wife team Ben and Marina is based on a very simple premise: Family, travel, fears, jobs, current events, the weather, traditions – basically Ben and Marina just chat with each other. I enjoy the energy between Marina and Ben. They speak clearly, using a very natural vocabulary. Listening to the podcast has improved my understanding of the rhythm and cadence of conversational Spanish. I also find that my active vocabulary is increasing. Is it worth listening to Notes in Spanish? I enjoy the pace and the conversational tone of each minute episode. I feel that listening to this podcast has already helped me hone my comprehension skills, making Spanish conversations easier to follow. What about advanced learners? Podcasts can help improve listening comprehension. Listening comprehension is, in many ways, the hardest skill to develop when learning a second language. Accents, speed of speech, slang, pitch and tone – there are so many variables that can make listening to a second language much more difficult than reading it, or even speaking it. Podcasts provide the perfect opportunity to work on listening comprehension without being able to use visuals as a crutch. While I absolutely feel that Skype conversations and TV shows like Destinos are great at improving my comprehension, podcasts work my brain in a completely different way. And so – being the podcast expert that I so obviously am – I cheerfully and enthusiastically recommend including podcasts into any learning plan! Do you listen to podcasts? Do you find them helpful? How do you use them?
