By subject[edit] The United States Department of State requires the reason for classification to be specified on all classified cables according to these classification categories: Of these, the vast majority are labeled 1. Thirty cables are labeled 1. These 26 cables are: The cables marked with an asterisk are not available in full. Thirty cables are classified 1. Five cables have the designation 1. Seven are designated 1. The nine cables with the label 1. By transnational organization[edit] Main article: Ambassador to Belgium , that the "EU no longer believes in the success of the military mission in Afghanistan ". He also added "Europe is doing it [War in Afghanistan] and will go along out of deference to the United States, but not out of deference to Afghanistan". Ambassador to France recommended that "we calibrate a target retaliation list that causes some pain across the EU". Nine British, German, U. In NATO wants to conduct exercises for this new plan. Global[edit] Copenhagen Accord on climate change[edit] Diplomatic cables show how the U. Critical Foreign Dependencies Initiative Perhaps the most sensitive of all releases as of 6 December was a cable from the U. State Department sent in February referencing the Critical Foreign Dependencies Initiative and listing installations and infrastructure worldwide that it considered critical to protect U. Before releasing this list WikiLeaks had deliberately removed details of names and locations, but much was still revealed. Ostensibly the list does not include any military facilities. Instead it includes key facilities that if attacked could disrupt the global supply chain and global communications, as well as goods and services important to the U. Department for Homeland Security in co-ordination with the U. Major port hubs, particularly in China, Japan and South Korea. The Bakuâ€”Tbilisiâ€”Ceyhan pipeline as well as many other strategic pipelines criss-crossing Eurasia. In connection to these pipelines also Georgia , Azerbaijan and Belarus are on the list. Mines that produce rare earths and other much-needed metals, especially in South Africa and Australia. Several underwater pipelines are listed in Japan, China and Britain. Ostensibly missing are also civil nuclear power plants outside of the United States. Dams close to the U. State Department spokesman Philip J. Crowley said the disclosure "gives a group like al-Qaeda a targeting list. WikiLeaks spokesman Kristinn Hrafnsson said with reference to the cable:
