

Chapter 1 : Wagner campaign calls mailer criticizing her illegal | Ozark Radio News

A Washington D.C.-based group called "Care in Action" has funded several attack ads against Wagner, both through mailers and online.

Scott Wagner spent an hour trying to show how different they are. Wolf also focused on his ethics and transparency for rejecting gifts and refusing to take a salary, while criticizing Wagner, the owner of Penn Waste, for not releasing his personal tax returns. He put Wolf in that camp, arguing that the governor is beholden to special interest groups, including labor unions, who have contributed heavily to his re-election campaign. Wagner pledged that, if elected, he will get more done in the first six months as governor than Pennsylvania residents have seen in 12 years. That line was one of several Wagner remarks that drew applause from the crowd, which was heavy with conservative business leaders. But Wolf, who likes to talk about Venn diagrams and finding areas of overlap between Democrats and Republicans, maintains he has been able to find compromise in nearly four years as governor. He said he believes Pennsylvania is on the right path and that voters will re-elect him because they want to stay the course. Much of the conversation Monday night was about injecting more civility into politics, which has become "too much of a blood sport," Trebek said. The lone exception may have been the death penalty. Wagner has taken a hard line, calling for mandatory capital punishment for school shooters despite a U. Supreme Court ruling that mandatory death sentences are unconstitutional. Wagner said "a life is a life" and that someone needs to step up and get tough on mass murderers. Wolf imposed a moratorium on the death penalty and said he continues to stand by it. Trebek also asked about reducing the size of the legislature, which Wagner supports and Wolf opposes. Wagner has pushed for a k-style program to replace the traditional defined-benefit system. Wolf said he will continue to push for a severance tax on natural-gas drillers, something he has lobbied for every year, to generate more money for education and infrastructure. Wagner is opposed because the state already charges an impact fee on drillers. The remaining time spent on business and tax issues focused on the tight labor market and the need for more skilled workers. Wolf said responsible regulation makes sense. He also highlighted recent initiatives and spending to help expand career and technical education programs run by the Department of Labor and Industry, most notably through expanded apprenticeship programs and industry partnerships. If voters listen to Wolf this fall, Pennsylvania is improving every year and on the right track. See more photos from the debate here:

Chapter 2 : Wolf, Wagner face off in one and only gubernatorial debate | CPBJ

Ann Wagner's campaign say a political mailer criticizing her on immigration issues is illegal. The St. Louis Post-Dispatch reports that the mailer has circulated to St. Louis County residents in.

Chapter 3 : PA-Gov: Koch Brothers Make A Late Entrance Into The Pennsylvania Governor's Race

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Officials with U.S. Rep. Ann Wagner's campaign say a political mailer criticizing her on immigration issues is illegal. The St. Louis Post-Dispatch reports that the mailer has circulated to St. Louis County residents in the final weeks before the Nov. 6 election.

Chapter 4 : PA Gov: Wolf Blasts Wagner in 2 New Ads | PoliticsPA

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Officials with U.S. Rep. Ann Wagner's campaign say a political mailer criticizing her on immigration issues is illegal. The St. Louis Post-Dispatch reports that the mailer has.

Chapter 5 : Wagner campaign calls mailer criticizing her illegal - Washington Times

DOWNLOAD PDF CRITICIZING WAGNER

Wagner, a Republican, is facing a challenge from Democrat Cort VanOstran in Missouri's 2nd District. The mailer fails to identify who paid for it, which is required by law. It claims that Wagner is "complicit in the separation of families," citing her yes vote on a border security and immigration reform bill.

Chapter 6 : Daily Press - We are currently unavailable in your region

Wagner Campaign Calls Mailer Criticizing Her Illegal Officials with U.S. Rep. Ann Wagner's campaign say a political mailer criticizing her on immigration issues is illegal.