

Chapter 1 : Free Printable Minimalist Calendar - Small Paper Things

I've been busy designing my free printable calendars for you! cute calendar to print. These are so perfect and adorable thanks for sharing your talent!

Planning and Planners Happy Monday everyone! I hope your week is off to a good start. Ours is getting started slowly. I think it might be time to take a scattered day and recharge. I played around a lot with how to style them and in the end, I opted to keep it really simple. Rather than playing with a pattern I opted to let the colours be the stars of the show. Nothing worse than having to download each month on its own. To grab a copy for yourself, just click the photo with the style you want and either it will open the PDF or a dialog box will pop-up asking where you would like to save. This all depends on your browser settings. The bones are still the same though for I opted to keep it just a basic grid. As you can see in the picture below, the colours really are center stage this year. I just print out the month or months that I need and I can plan out how I want things to progress and then compare it to my actual planner and see if my expectations are realistic or if I have to shuffle things around. Next up we have the 2 page per month layout. This one is the one that will be going into my planner later on this year. I love the extra room to write things down, and I really like the notes section on the right-hand side. Again, I kept the layout the same. Before I dash away, I did want to offer up a couple of printing tips. If your printer has margins set, the band across the top will not go completely from side to side. You can check for margins in your printer settings. Then flip the stack over, however, it works for your printer and print all the even numbers. Then put the stack in and print. This means that page 1 and page 24 the second half of December will only be printed on one side. As always, I do so hope you enjoy the printables. If you have any questions please let me know in the comments or drop me a line via email. Until next time, I wish you all a wonderful week! Are you already looking at planning part of ? For more information please see my disclosure policy. They give me all the flexibility of a binder combined with all I love about coil bindings. You can easily use a binder too or, take your printed pages to be bound at a print and copy shop. I personally like the freedom to switch things up a bit. While the really cheap copy paper will work just fine, I like the extra durability and smoothness I get in a heavier paper. Also, I like not seeing the ghost image of the stuff on the other side. Currently my favourite choice for paper is this Hammermill 28lb Laser Print paper. I print all my planner pages on our old black and white laser printer while I save up for a replacement for my colour printer. A good writing instrument makes all the difference, and those Pentel pens are amazing. They write very smoothly, the gel ink dries fairly quickly, there is very little bleed through, and the colours are nice and vibrant. The retracable highlighter are quick and easy to use when I need them. These are just a few of my favourite planner supplies. In the mean time though, feel free to ask questions in the comments.
