

Chapter 1 : How Do I Get My Lazy Husband to Help With Housework? | PairedLife

But it does not matter because, I'm no longer a slave to housework and my housekeeper gets paid so he's not a slave either. If you love democracy and freedom, you should buy this book. Freedom Rocks!!!!

Contact Author Is your man a good-for-nothing, lazy, TV-watching slob? While you bust your hump to finish the dishes, laundry, and cleaning, your husband channel surfs and falls asleep on the couch. If this describes your predicament, join the club. Women across the nation are exhausted, beaten down, and in dire need help. They need their husbands to step up. How to Get Your Husband Moving Here, in no particular order, are six thoughts about men and housework. If you want help, study these ideas and make them your own. Tell him one thing he can help you with and leave it at that. Men are genetically wired to reject all lists. If you do this you are doomed to fail. The more you nag, the less he will do. Just ask once and leave it that. Let him decide the timeline. This may sound counter intuitive, but it works. Men need to be in control. The minute they feel threatened they flee. If your man runs, then there is no way he will ever complete the job. Besides, when he completes the job, his pride will be surely let you know that he did it before the time elapsed. Let me put it this way. Imagine if your husband pointed out all of the flaws in your appearance and never noticed your good points. You would eventually break down and stop caring about your appearance. The problem may just be your expectations and not your husband. Let your man be the hero. A man loves to do heroic things for his wife. In many cases, especially if you work, day to day house work is incredibly tiring and draining. For him to truly understand your difficulty, you need to make a point of explaining your predicament, not in a condescending or angry tone, but in a manner that conveys your predicament and desperation. Buy the sledge hammer, unplug the TV and drag it out to the driveway. When he comes home from work, just as he turns into the driveway, lift up the sledge hammer and smash the crap out of the TV. He may just get the message.

It also means setting consequences for when children fail to complete their chores, and establishing rewards for when they do. I know, I know! this sounds so old school. According to a recent piece on the New York Times Motherlode blog, there seems to be a split between traditional views of children doing housework, and less authoritative, more safety-conscious or child-centric, if you will ideas about chores. I come down on the latter side of the debate. For example, I was recently talking with someone about kitchen safety. When he finds a steak knife while unloading silverware from the dishwasher he grabs it by the handle and calls me to retrieve it. Will my son slice himself with a knife at some point? I do too, every so often. For every task he completes, Felix gets a sticker. After six stickers, he gets a dollar. This adds up to 5 dollars a week, which is more than I got when I was in middle school, but hey! With inflation, it feels fair. Notice I said sometimes. We still need to remind him and occasionally command him to get to it, but he usually does. With a whine or gripe or two. Once an allowance enters the picture, you can talk about budgeting, and the value of money, and saving up for the things you really want. Yes, it might even help instill a strong work ethic, and instill pride in a job well done. More than all these things, though, it establishes a healthy dynamic in the family. A family divvies up the domestic duties and everyone cooperates to get the work done. We put on music, we talk, we laugh, we work together. Life, like parenting, requires effort.

Please keep in mind that this is written tongue in cheek before you get your panties in a twist. If you read carefully, there are also some very insightful comments as well. Meanwhile, though, if you play your cards right, you can extract great personal benefits from her new interest. I assure you, your wife has not suddenly been transformed into a willing, pliant, and eager to please fantasy woman. She is talking about sex. Specifically, she is trying to tell you that the idea of slavery turns her on. Be sure to keep this in mind, because you can only get her to do what you want when you can tap into the eroticism of it all. This is all about feelings. She wants to feel weak, and she wants to see you as strong, because that is what turns her on. Of course, making her feel that you are strong will take some work on your part. Instead of having a chance to realize that she does not want to be a slave in the comfort and safety of her own home, she will keep the desire inside her and conclude instead that you are not worthy to be her master. She might pack up and run off in the middle of the night to enter the service of MasterDoom in Portland, or, worse, resent you for decades. So suck it up and do your husbandly duty. If she takes easily to the first one, try another. You will, of course, insist on lots of sex. At least initially, she will be so turned on by your new arrangement that she may want it as much as you. You may even get her to agree that you can take her any time and any place, in any way you wantâ€”heck, she may insist on giving you this power. Sometimes even the most willing slave girls have headaches, and you will lose points if you insist on screwing her anyway. So either be sensitive to how she is feeling, or, if that sounds like too much work, do what I did and give her an out: Buy her a symbol of her slave status. A gold necklace is the most common choice. When you give it to her, stage a little ceremony. Have her kneel in front of you and promise to be yours forever while you clasp it around her neck. Women love this shit, and if you do it with dignity you will rise several notches in her esteem. It never did any good. The erotic charge flows from the fantasy, and all the other benefits flow from that erotic charge. Break up the fantasy, and the charge will dissipate. If your wife does, excellent: Your wife wants to serve you only in ways that are erotic to her. No, the safe way is to ask her. This has to be done delicately, because she wants to feel like she is not in control and you have to humor this belief. So put on your stern dom face and ask her to suggest some ways that she might serve you. My wife enjoys clearing the table after dinner while I stay in my chair: Look for the things that do this for your wife. If you really want her to clean the house, try this: Look at catalogues with her, or take her to stores, and watch her eyes. If something makes them get big, buy it. This is not the time to be stingy. Using this stuff and the atmosphere it helps to create you get to tie up your wife, beat the hell out of her, use her however you want, and then demand that she thank you for it on her knees. Serious disagreements have to be worked out the old way even with slave girls. Have the long discussions first, and, once you have worked things out, stage a scene and whip her hard. On the other hand, you may sometimes be able to incorporate your actual disagreements into your scenes, once they are worked out over the kitchen table; this works for us sometimes. She needs to draw erotic energy from somewhere to keep her submissive drive going, and, hey, you may need help too. So go to parties and dinners, and act as in control as you can manage. Your wife will feel reinforced in her slave identity, and you will reap the benefits. I suppose it is because of the strong element of theatre in all sceneing. In a sense, all doms and subs are performing, even if only for each other, and it may just be natural to extend the action to a larger stage. Some of it is hot as hell. In what other context can you look at naked, writhing women with your wife at your side and have it turn both of you on? Over time, the madness that overtook your wife when she first discovered erotic slavery online will fade. Be flexible, and accept that over time your relationship will continue to change. Think hard about what you most enjoy from the slave interlude, and ask that it be continued as much as possible. I like having my wife apologize to me on her knees, and she still does. Every marriage needs all the spark it can get, and if you are lucky dominance and submission will bring sparks to yours for decades to come. Meanwhile, live it up. Order the bitch to her knees, use her as roughly as you want, and send her to bed naked. He is my everything and I serve only him. He is a gentleman, a wonderful husband, and my best friend.

Before I entered High School my mom had two more kids, making five. Since she and my father had 3 kids getting ready to go to college they both had to work. The 3 oldest kids had to take up the slack. We vacuumed the whole house and had other chores, like cleaning the bathroom and taking care of the babies and starting dinner. I was also required to keep my own room tidy. Those images I see of a "typical" teenagers room would never make it in my family. The worst thing my father ever said, was that he was disappointed in us. That was enough to rock my world. As your kids get older you need to give them a few more chores to do. It is all a part of growing up so they can become adults. Start with the vacuuming, they can each do their own rooms as soon as they are old enough to run the machine. Then have them help out in other ways. It was always my job to sweep the kitchen floor after dinner and take out the trash. My sisters had to start dinner, set the table and clean out the dishwasher mom ran it every night. Mom had some high standards of cleanliness and passed them on to us. Have them clean the bathroom, they can take turns or do parts of it each week. Once they realize that they have to clean their areas they should start taking better care of them. But, we knew she expected our house to be kept clean and that meant our rooms as well. Sure she had to tell us to do some things a few times, she had patience with us, but by the third time we knew we had better get hopping. Usually, then came the cry, can I do it at the commercial, which she allowed. But, the moment that commercial came on the TV we got to it. You might raise their allowance a little as part of their new duties. Surely a quarter or a dollar a more a week is worth having them keep their own areas clean. Explain to them that as they get older they have to do more and be more responsible. Part of that responsibility will be letting them have a little more money of their own. That was part of her job and she never failed to do her share. She set the example and expected us to follow it.

Don't do piles of ironing. I just unload my washing machine, hang the washing up somewhere to dry - or on the line in good weather - then put away in wardrobe/drawer. I only iron things for the next day the night before.
