Team Arrow is facing new villains and new heartache, all while trying to recover from the death of one of their own. And of course, life gets even more complicated for Felicity when her mother, Donna guest star Charlotte Ross , stops by for a surprise visit. Check out what she had to say after the jump, and be aware that there are some spoilers. Honestly, it was like being presented with a golden ticket. I feel really lucky and fortunate. What most surprised you about what you learned about Felicity from this episode? I guess her trouble surprised me. I always look at her as someone who helps me. Felicity has a very specific sense of style in the present. What was it like to explore a very different look for her? That was awesome for me. It also told me that she went through other phases. We all tried things when we were in high school or college. We all grow up at different times, or find ourselves at different times. Felicity finds what her heart is, in the flashbacks of this episode, which is cool. Who in the cast had the funniest reaction to seeing goth Felicity? I was dressed as goth Felicity, and we had a sexual harassment seminar with the cast and crew from Arrow and The Flash. There were hundreds of people. I had just gotten off set and was stepping in late, and no one knew it was me. Nobody knew it was me. That was really fun. It was fun to be in that sort of disguise. The wig was really itchy, really heavy and really hot. I have such appreciation now for actors who have to do that, all of the time. As much fun as it is to transform and have it take you over, it was definitely uncomfortable. What can you say about her past relationship with Cooper Nolan Funk , and how was it to play those scenes? It was nice to experience her in young love. It was just about being with this person who fit with her and who matched her personality. They were in college, and it was feisty and lusty. They were discovering and growing together. It ended in a devastating way, which we get to find out about in the episode. What can you say about the dynamic between Felicity and her mother Charlotte Ross? Their dynamic is so interesting. Their energies are just completely different. She ends up accepting her mother for who she is, at the end of it, which is what her mother has taught her to do. I think Felicity realizes that the acceptance she has for other people sometimes comes later for the people we love the most, or who taught us that lesson, growing up. Will we see similarities between them, or are they glaringly different? There are definitely similarities in who they are as women and who they are to other people. The nurturing philosophy of what they both symbolize, I find very similar. With things between all of Team Arrow being more intense and heavy since the death of Sara Caity Lotz , because everything just has more weight now, how will that continue to affect Felicity and Oliver Stephen Amell this season? I just think it affects them so deeply, in the sense that death is closer to home than we thought, and we already thought it was really close. I think that takes a lot more energy and thought and care than it does to put it towards the energy of their relationship dynamic. As a friend, she might be benefitting him more. When you get involved romantically with someone, sometimes you end up overlooking things that you could help people with better, as a friend. Is it fun to play the dynamic between Felicity and Ray Palmer Brandon Routh because they are lighter together? Felicity and Barry Allen Grant Gustin have great chemistry with each other and they understand each other in ways that no one else does. Do you think that will always keep them connected, and keep open the possibility for cross-overs to happen? I think it will stay open. In a perfect world, they are matched for each other. But I think it keeps the door open, especially because they need each other as friends. The scenes where Felicity had to talk to and about Sara with her dead body just laying there were just heart-breaking. How difficult was that to do? Any time we can get Caity Lotz back on the show, I will strive to be in scenes with her. Arrow airs on Wednesday nights on The CW.
