Look no further, we have rounded up the current top 50 interior designers in the UK, whatever your style. Revamping your home has never been easier. He studied interior design at the American College, before setting up his showroom in ; eight years later he decided that his home was a far better showcase for his interiors and since then, clients wanting his bespoke, consultancy service visit by appointment. Carden Cunietti Audrey Carden and Eleanora Cunietti met 25 years ago at a London antiques fair when they were both scouting for pieces for clients. Their first business venture together was the Carden Cunietti interiors shop in Notting Hill; since they have been concentrating solely on their interior design practice. And mixing light sources, including vintage pieces, is definitely part of our vision. The Apartment at Bicester Village. Charles Bateson Charles Bateson cites nine years spent working for Ashley Hicks as his greatest design inspiration. Certainly it stood him in good stead when it came to starting his own practice more than two decades ago. Convex mirrors are a trademark touch he has his own collection of mirrors and lamps , as are favourite materials such as Verre Eglomise and other deep-etched decorative glass panels, stone and marble marquetry lately, he has also started incorporating more wrought-iron. Bespoke, built-in and freestanding furniture is mostly designed in-house. Bateson also goes to a huge effort to ensure that clients enjoy the process â€” surely one of the reasons why so many return. Since then his studio has tackled numerous luxury hotels such as The Wellesley in Knightsbridge think embossed leather wall panels, bespoke lighting and fashion photography from the Vogue archives and Jumby Bay, a private island off the coast of Antigua where he recently designed the restaurant and private dining rooms. The rest of his time is spent on high-end, super prime residences. His current headline project is Langley House, a Grade II-listed Palladian mansion in Buckinghamshire which opens this summer as a country house hotel. The pair work on the initial concepts together, then split roles: Jon focuses more on the interior architecture and master planning while Sarah concentrates on developing the furnishings. The materials we use are clean and unobtrusive, in other words â€” easy on the eye. The combination of artwork, sculpture and artefacts is also key, and an instinctive part of what he does is help clients curate their objects in unexpected ways. They also make a good starting point for a decorative scheme: Ebba Thott Sigmar London-based Swedish designer Ebba Thott is co-founder of Sigmar, a multidisciplinary company comprised of a shop that specialises in 20th-century design run by her business partner, Danish furniture expert Nina Hertig and a studio. By which she means making a home feel tied together, often by subtly weaving in echoing patterns in certain places for that hard-to-achieve lived-in feel. She also has her own collection of paints, Damo, based on a broad grey scale, which are often requested by clients the hues work particularly well with dark woods. The result is schemes that are considered and ultra calming. She loves Belgian design in particular the work of Axel Vervoordt and considers creating light and shade as one of the most important principles of her schemes. After a spell working in film production with Ridley Scott, she began making curtains and soft furnishings from home, before officially launching her business in Fiona Barratt-Campbell Neutral palettes layered with texture to create interest: A recent full-scale residential redevelopment in Moscow, which involved turning a concrete shell into a family apartment, was kitted out with a bespoke contemporary FBC London kitchen and contrasting old-world silk rugs and a curated art collection. Right now, she has 16 projects on the go, from a Georgian terrace in Bath to a waterfront penthouse apartment. The great granddaughter of Winston Churchill who set up her design consultancy in , Flora counts the whimsical nature of the Bloomsbury Group and the decorators such as Nancy Lancaster and John Fowler among her many influences. Her own growing collection of antique textiles can also drive a project and she is launching her own range of fabrics later this year. A year ago, they took the concept one step further with the launch of th2Studio, an online venture offering fully designed rooms, furniture and accessories at the click of a button. In general, creative and managing director Gail favours natural timbers, warm wools and crisp linens to give a room an organic undertone, plus a soothing colour palette. Gavin Houghton A chance conversation at a dinner party with the owner of a Jacobean house in Suffolk who was looking to give it an update, led to this former art director turning to interior design he had already done a stint at David Collins Studio. That was ten years ago and since then he has honed his English country style to a tee.
