Whittemore certainly made an original world. I think my only problem with this book is that it all fell a little flat. From the dialogue and plot to the characters and writing style. I think the main reason why it f Firepods, magic staffs, a city in a giant flower and doctors using spiders to check if your neural impulses? Plus, they acted like toddlers most of the time. In a world where they use spiders to assistant doctors? No, it might turn you into a toad. Overall, this fell into neutral territory. I enjoyed it, and can see me rereading it someday. I would probably recommend to my friends. For more reviews like this, visit totakeuslandsaway. This is not usually my pick of a genre to read but it is a book for our book club this month. It is always interesting to go to a different world and where you have to learn about their ways and reasons. Having travelers from our world certainly helped to explain their world to the readers!! Classic s This was the second time that I read this book but it has been a long time since the first reading. Classic storyline - power object is in the wrong hands and the good people have to get it back. Nice characters and nice storyline. It is certainly nice to escape through a book and this book fills that niche!! Jo Whitemore on Jo Whitemore: Thank goodness I was a girl! The first years of my life I can recall are living in Boise, Idaho, and wishing every day that I could go to school like my big sister did. We lived in Carpinteria right on the beach, so every day after school, we could run out the door and boogie board until dinnertime. The local library had a program where you could go to the zoo for free if you read ten books and could give a summary on each one. I think it took me two weekends to get that free pass. One of my favorite memories was being chosen to attend the Author-Go-Round. I met Laura Numeroff when she was just getting started! I joined every honors class and UIL competition I could. I wrote for the school paper, The Battalion , and drove campus buses for spending money. After I broke off a mirror, broke a set of doors, got a speeding ticket and hit two cars while driving the bus all the events occurred at different times, by the way I decided I probably needed to get out from behind the wheel. Talk about lofty goals! Nor is it an easy one. After I attended a booksigning in where my favorite fantasy author, Terry Brooks , was speaking, I was inspired to start working on a fantasy novel of my own. At the same conference, Megan Atwood, the acquisitions editor for Llewellyn Worldwide at the time, stood up and announced that her publishing house was looking for middle grade and young adult fantasy novels. With a bit of my confidence restored from my meeting with Q, I walked up to Megan and spoke with her about my book. She gave me her business card and told me to read their submission guideline and send in my work. When I got home, I sent her my manuscript. Roughly a year later, my first novel is now in stores.
