Beschreibung bei Amazon The Dollanganger series is author V. The Dollanganger story follows the Foxworth children, Cory, Chris, Carrie and Cathy Dollanganger through the ordeals they encounter following a great tragedy. When their much loved father passes away, the four Dollanganger children find their sadness turned to terror in the face of cruelty. Following the story telling structure V. C Andrews is best known for, the first pair of novels focuses primarily upon the four Dollanganger children, named so in an attempt to separate them from their family name of Foxworth. The last book in the series leaps back in time, shifting focus once more from the latest generation of Dollangangers to Olivia and Malcom Foxworth, grandparents to the original four Dollanganger children, as well as their parents during which a final conclusion to the story is achieved through revelations that explore the events that elicited the events of the first book in the Dollanganger series. The Author The Dollanganger series of books are the works of one V. Andrews; born in Portsmouth, Virginia, Andrews was the only daughter of the family, the youngest of the Andrews children. She spent a considerable portion of her life requiring support from crutches or a wheel chair resulting from crippling arthritis elicited by a serious fall, severe back injuries and intensive corrective surgery during her teenage years. Andrews none the less forged forward through a career as a commercial artist and portrait painter, overcoming her physical restrictions through a four years correspondence course. C Andrews died of breast cancer in ; it was as a result of the breadth of her success that the Andrews family saw it fit to hire a ghostwriter to complete the final novel in her series. Flower in the Attic The first book in the Dollanganger series was released in The story introduced the four Dollanganger children and the tragedy that would impel them down a difficult and dark road. Petals in the Wind The second novel in Dollanganger series returns to siblings Cathy, Chris and Carrie following the despair of their captivity; intent upon building bright futures and determined to eliminate their mother from their lives, the Dollangangers find that the memories of the past are not so easily forgotten. The movie adaptation was a remake of the original movie; while the movie utilized the material from the novel, it took liberties with the plot, making changes to characters and outcomes. The remake by Lifetime follows the content of the novel closely, including the incestuous elements. The movie attracted as much interest as it did controversy, many a fan showing a greater appreciation for the remake and its decision to follow the original story closely. Jack Reacher is back! Based on V.C. Andrews' controversial cult-classic novel, "Flowers in the Attic" tells the story of the Dollanganger kids who, after the unexpected death of their father, are coerced to stay hidden in the attic of their ruthless grandmother.

What is Flowers in the Attic? Spoilers for the Dollanganger series ahead. Back in , Virginia C. Andrews released her light novel Flowers in the Attic to much critical acclaim. Blurring the lines between genres, Flowers contains elements of romance, mystery, and especially horror. Having twice been adapted to the silver screen, Flowers still entertains audiences in modern days. Flowers in the Attic Film Plot Summary Teen narrator Cathy Dollanganger and her three siblings are devastated after the loss of their loving father. Meanwhile, Olivia sternly brings the kids food, severely punishing them whenever they act out. After three years pass and several horrid incidents take place more on that later , the children learn the truth: Barely alive, the surviving children escape the mansion, and Cathy swears revenge. Who was really poisoning the kids and why? When food stops coming to the attic, Chris goes so far as slitting his own wrists for the sake of allowing young twins Cory and Carrie to drink his blood for nourishment. Nonetheless, Chris casts many a forbidden gaze at Cathy as her body matures into that of a young woman. He enters a jealous rage upon hearing Cathy kissed the family lawyer who was sleeping out of curiosity, and rapes Cathy You be the judge. Malcolm also does eventually alter his will to include his daughter upon her return, albeit with the stipulation that she never has kids. Olivia Foxworth Olivia Foxworth At the start of the story, Olivia is painted as the antagonist, and several brutal actions support this idea. However, Olivia harbors a rarely-seen softer side, and to be fair, her wariness of incest between the children proves to be accurate. Chris and Corrine Corrine Dollanganger The beautiful mother of four is eventually unmasked as a selfish traitor willing to poison her children just for money, but she only tried killing them after learning about the clause Malcolm added to his will, right? Careful readings suggest her nefarious plans may have started not after learning of the clause, but as soon as her husband died. From this point, Corrine is often described as having guilty expressions and actions when she looks at the kids, and the novel heavily implies her claims of studying to be a secretary and thus provide for the kids, freeing them from the attic were only a lie to placate them. True, she somewhat redeems herself in the third novel, If There Be Thorns, set many years later, but as far as the first book goes, Corrine harbors the most villainous heart. March Learn how and when to remove this template message In , the Dollanganger family lives an idyllic life in Gladstone, Pennsylvania until Mr. Dollanganger dies in a car accident, leaving his wife Corrine deep in debt with four children and no professional skills. Only Corrine is allowed in the grand estate, as the children remain hidden from their grandfather Malcolm. The older children, Cathy and Chris, attempt to make the best of the situation for their younger siblings, twins Carrie and Cory, by turning the attic into an imaginary garden. Yet the children learn the truth of their terrible new fate, as Olivia treats them with disdain and threatens to severely punish them for any disobedience. Corrine returns from meeting with her parents, having been savagely whipped by Olivia. At first, Corrine visits her children daily, sometimes bringing expensive gifts. Yet the grandmother emotionally and physically abuses the children, constantly threatening to whip them for any acts she considers "sinful". Despite her apologies and promises to make amends, Cathy worries their mother has changed and no longer cares for them. A year later, Cathy and Chris have both entered puberty and adopted parental roles with Carrie and Cory, who no longer recognize Corrine. Despite personal shame, Cathy and Chris develop physical attraction toward each other. Chris refuses, and Olivia abandons them for three weeks, driving them to near-starvation. When Cathy cuts her own hair, meals resume and now include sugared doughnuts as a surprise. Corrine visits for the first time in six months, returning from her wedding and European honeymoon with Bart. Cathy and Chris react angrily, but relent when Corrine threatens to never visit again. One night, Cathy discovers her sleeping stepfather and kisses him. When Chris learns of the act, he is enraged and rapes Cathy. He apologizes after, and Cathy forgives him by saying she wanted it too. Cory becomes sick and Corrine agrees to take him to the hospital only after threats from Cathy. The next day, Corrine returns and tells them Cory died, allegedly from pneumonia. Without warning, their mother and Bart move out. The three remaining children finally flee, catching a train to Florida. Chris and Cathy decide against contacting the police as their main concern is to stay together and protect Carrie who is still a minor. Chris assures Cathy that they can make a new life without their mother, but Cathy swears to exact revenge one day.

Flowers in the Attic (TV Movie) cast and crew credits, including actors, actresses, directors, writers and more.

Plot[edit] In the late s, the Dollanganger children – year-old Chris, year-old Cathy, 5-year-old twins Carrie and Cory – live happily with their parents, Christopher and Corrine, in Pennsylvania. This changes when Christopher dies in a car crash, leaving the family devastated and heavily in debt. Four months later, Corrine announces they are going to go live with her wealthy parents in Virginia. She explains that she was estranged from her parents and changed her last name because of this. The next day, the children are given a list of rules and Olivia tells them to stay in the attic at all times. She promises the children she will make her father forgive her; once he has forgiven her, she will introduce him to the children, and they will live happily together at Foxworth. Due to lack of fresh air and sunshine, the twins have stopped growing; meanwhile, Cathy and Chris are entering puberty. Chris accidentally walks in on Cathy while she is trying on her first bra. Cathy and Chris refuse to comply and give their remaining food to the twins while they rely mostly on water. Olivia appears to relent and leaves them a basket of food; however, Cathy awakens to find tar in her hair the next morning. As Chris reluctantly cuts her hair, he tells her that he finds her beautiful, but knows it is wrong to think of her like that. Cathy and Chris conclude that their mother has abandoned them and begin planning their escape. When Corrine does return, she happily announces she has married Bart and the reason for her absence was her honeymoon in Europe. She is upset that the children are not more excited and seems oblivious to the deterioration in the twins. Olivia soon brings the children sugar-powdered doughnuts, which she says are a gift from their mother. Olivia beats Chris with a belt after he demands to be called by his name rather than "boy. Chris assures her nothing will happen to him and they kiss. After she leaves, Chris reveals the whole scene was a scheme to get an impression of the attic key in soap, and he carves a wooden copy. On a night raid, Cathy finds Bart asleep and kisses him. Chris later overhears his mother and Bart talking about a dream of a young, blonde-haired girl coming into the room and kissing Bart. Chris angrily confronts Cathy, who assures him that the kiss meant nothing and she only did it out of curiosity. She kisses him and they end up having sex. Cathy suggests they move to Florida and Chris tells her that he loves her and can never love anyone else. The next day, Corrine tells them Cory had pneumonia and died, and has already been buried. During their search for valuables, they discover that Corrine and Bart have left Foxworth Hall. Chris overhears a conversation between the butler and a maid, and learns that Olivia has been leaving poison to kill "the mice" in the attic and that their grandfather died seven months ago. Olivia then comes to take their key, and Chris restrains her long enough for Cathy and Carrie to escape. Olivia chases after them, but panics due to her claustrophobia when Chris shuts the door and turns the lights off. Olivia tells them that their mother was the one who poisoned them, not her, but they ignore her and climb out the window, fleeing on foot. Horrified, he tells them to run while he cuts off the electric fence for them. They board a train to Florida and Chris assures her that their ordeal is finally over. Cathy vows revenge on their mother.

Flowers in the Attic is most famous for the fact that Cathy and her brother fall in love. It's a weird, strangely old-fashioned love story (and is Chris ever the stuff of teenage dreams: handsome, brilliant, extravagantly chivalrous), but it's not what hooked me.
