To find Flanders, you just have to think like Flanders I wear the same stupid sweater everyday at-- Homer: Wow, Dad, you took a baptismal for me. How do you feel? Augustine of Hippo after his conversion by Ambrose of Milan. Homer, what did you just say? I know one of you is responsible for this, so repeat after me: If I withhold the truth may I go straight to hell, where I will eat naught but burning hot coal and drink naught but burning hot cola That Bart, right there! Milhouse, you did the right thing. Bart, come with me for punishment. How could you tell on me?! Why would they lie? What would they have to gain? Saying "God bless you" crams it back in. I am familiar with the works of Pablo Neruda. I got it used from the Navy. You can flash-fry a buffalo in 40 seconds. But I want it now! Get rid of it all. Nah, too many bad memories. I kind of traded your soul to the guy at the comic book store. I got some cool pogs: Will you be donating that million dollars now, sir? Marge, tell Bart I just want to drink a nice glass of syrup like I do every morning. Bart, thank your mother for pointing that out. Lisa, tell your mother to get off my case. Bart, go to your room! That colored chalk was forged by Lucifer himself!! You see, your crazy friend never heard of the food chain. Just ask this scientist. Ha Ha Ha Ha Yes you were, Jimmy. What did I ever do to you? Why does it talk like a lamb? Yes Ralph what is it? My worm went in my mouth and then I ate it can I have a new one? Just try to sleep while the other children are learning. And what are you going to do about it? Where are you going at this hour? That was the captain of the high school basketball team. Uh, yeah, well, he was turning into a monster, though. Wheel him out quietly. The next time we fall asleep, we could die! Eh, welcome to my world! The doorbell rings, and Homer is greeted by the angry face of Lard Lad] Homer: Just go smash open his house. The doorbell rings, Homer answers and is greeted by the same angrier Lard Lad] Ned: I told you, Flanders has it! The chain that put the "fat" in "fat Southern Sheriffs". Instead of making sandwiches with bread, use pop tarts. Instead of chewing gum, chew bacon. You could brush your teeth with milkshakes. Hey, did you go to Hollywood Upstairs Medical College too? I would if I could. Carl and Lenny walk past the rumbling tank without a clue] Carl: Oh, who am I kidding? The fingers you have used to dial are too fat. To obtain a special dialing wand, please mash the keypad with your palm now. Get away, damn it! Run for your lives! What can I get for thirty cents?! Homer, your quick-thinking and bravery have turned a potential Chernobyl into a mere Three Mile Island.

But our relationship with them is frequently rife with complications. They are, after all, our parents. We get to revisit the whole childhood experience with them, one generation removed, through our offspring. Multi-generational and family issues expert Amy Goyer offers her advice for easing conflict and tapping into this potentially rich familial resource: What should a parent do to manage over-indulgent grandparents? Many grandparents see spoiling the grandkids as their role. It brings them great joy to be generous to their grandkids and see their faces light up when they are. If you can, accept a bit of spoiling and be grateful your children have loving adults in their lives. But if you really feel your parenting is being compromised, parents should talk with grandparents and set boundaries. So many grandparents tell me that a simple misunderstanding caused problems in their relationship with parents of their grandchildren. For example, if you have a strict rule that your children go to bed at 8 p. However, since your time with them is special, you could read to them for a half hour after they get in bed. Prioritize the three most important issues or house rules and emphasize them with grandparents. Explain why they are important to you. Try to relax and expect some differences “ and be grateful you have grandparents who are willing to help out! Lastly, really examine your motives. Is this a power struggle, and is it worth the misery? Or is it something imperative that affects the safety and health of your children? What about grandparents who are a bad influence? Maybe they fight with each other? What approach should a parent take? Our research indicates that it generally works the other way: Grandparents will stop smoking, swearing or drinking because of grandchildren. Grandparents will focus more on their health because they want to be around grandkids for a good long time. Talk gently with grandparents about the habit or behavior that you feel is a negative influence on the children and explain why you feel it is. For some grandparents, sharing a bit of research might do the trick. For others anecdotes and stories work better. Remember that these habits have usually been around a long time and may be hard to break. Offer to help them kick the habit, whatever the habit may be. Be supportive, not confrontational. Acknowledge first that you know they love their grandchildren and would never do anything intentionally to hurt them, but alert them that you think some of their habits may have unintended consequences for the children. Also remember that you, as parents, have the most influence over your kids. Some idiosyncrasies may be unpleasant, but children will not necessarily pick up the bad habits of their grandparents “ or aunts, uncles, cousins or any other family member. My grandfather cussed every other word, but I have never once heard my dad or mom swear. My dad and mom had much more influence. But parents in this situation will have to be adults and should accept that they will have to be around the in-laws at times in order to nurture that relationship. Be a role model for your children. Get this from a library! Grandpa doesn't know it's me. [Donna Guthrie; Katy Keck Arnsteen] -- Elizabeth observes her grandfather become a victim of Alzheimer's disease and describes its symptoms and effects.

Has this poem touched you? Now he is getting ready to do 40 years. I hate my dad. He was never there for me and is a drunk, but I still find myself crying alone in my room wanting my dad to come comfort me or to come walk me down the aisle when the time comes. I really wish I did growing up. My mum is also absent. One day all the storms will pass. There is no rainbow without rain. Good days will come. At least you see what it is at a young age. You will find your own family in this world. It will be friends or who you marry one day. Once you work on your expectations with your parents, it will help with the pain. I am 32 years old, and I have been married to my wife for 10 years. She had three children from two different men. When we married they were ages 1, 3, and 5, all boys. The two youngest were from the same man. Now they are 10, 12, and 15 years old. I do not have any biological children, and as my wife had her tubes tied after the youngest, it is very unlikely that I ever will. Over the years of supporting my boys in every facet of life, financial, emotional, and everything in between, I have come to love them so much. At 15, my son and his mother found the bio on Facebook and bio has reached out to my son. He has my support in whatever he decides regarding bio, but internally I feel protective and a little jealous. Is it too late? If you want him back, then give him a chance. He came back in my life when I went to high school. He has a job, but he spends his money with friends and never thinks about me. I gave my dad so many opportunities to be my dad, but he never tried. Now I have a son. I feel for my son. I have no family. He was never there for me because he has been in jail since I was born. I would still want to see him again and give him a chance to be in my life. A little bit about me real quick. I found my bio father when I was When I found him he said he had no idea that I was even conceived, let alone born and living an entire life. My opinion on your situation is you are literally the only person who can answer your question. You have to decide within your heart if you want him around, if you are ready forgive him, and if you want him to be a part of your future. I hope you allow him to at the very least explain his side. It will help you decide if you want him around and give you the peace of mind you need. He left before I was born. I am 13 now and have never seen him. Sometimes I wonder how it would be if I had a father. It is hard to see her struggling to find me school clothes and shoes. I could never ever forgive him. I think to myself, does he even know my name at this point in time? Does he think about me? I just want to know if he loves me. I felt just like you. I thought I would never forgive him for what he did. He left my sister and my pregnant mom, but I found out more to the story of what happened. I do know that meeting my father was scary, and I had so many questions, so much anger, I put off meeting him. I wondered will he be what I expect? Will I be what he expects? Will he love me? Will he accept me? After meeting him I feel like the missing place in my heart in filled. I hope to have many more times with him, but if all I ever have is that one meeting I at least can say I have met him. Try not to hate him until you know what happened. Maybe ask your mom. It might not hurt as bad as you think. Good luck in your situation. Please remember no matter what, if you have the chance to meet him, try not to pass it up. You might regret it. He went into the military. He said he had to find a better job. I was sad, but I understood. And now he is moving back and acting like he missed nothing. And I am so conflicted, like first I feel pissed off then I feel guilty, then I get sad, then I get pissed again because I am sad, and the cycle repeats. My father and mother split up and moved away from each other when I was seven. Then a year later they got back together. Then shortly after, they were slip up and divorced. I acted like I was fine, which tricked my emotions into making me feel that way. My dad was with several women after the divorce. One was a cutter and she made me feel very uncomfortable. Next was a lady who had a child who tried to kill her brother. Next was a Brazilian woman who treated me like crap and talked about me in from of her son and my dad when I left the dinner table. I told my family how badly she treated me and they made him break up with her. He dated her behind my back. My father was an alcoholic throughout all this, and all his girlfriends encouraged his drinking and partying. To this day I remember sitting on the couch when I was young and my father putting his hand up my thigh and I flipped out. He had been arrested when I was young and has been taking care of my baby sister who is a year younger than me. He tells my mom that he is never able to get in touch with me, but he never once called or texted me. I always have to be the one to say something. My dad is currently in jail. My dad never abused or walked out on my life or never said he loved me. I love and miss you so much, Papa. He has never been there for me. He has made this year in particular a living hell for me and my mum. I will never forget the line "always my father but never my dad. This really upsets me because I have given him multiple chances to be in my life. He got married after he and my mom split up. Since then I guess he just forget about me. To all of the young people, Never ever blame yourself. Your dad obviously is selfish. My mom just passed away and she was the best mom. It makes me sad reading some of these comments. Hang in there guys. Your dad is missing out. His loss, most definitely.
