Help! My Little Girl's Growing Up by Annette Smith Overall this is a good book with good information for a mother whose daughter is heading into the preteen years.

Being around friends, family, and nature is what makes us tick. This is the story of our life and all of our moments that we share! Wednesday, October 3, My little girl Shelby is going to turn 1 year old this Friday Oct. I have learned a ton in the past year about myself, my husband, and life in general. So I have decided to pass along my vast knowledge to the all of you and make a list of the top ten things I have learned in the past year. It has been on more than one occasion that either myself or Jon has been taking a bath with Shelby, having a wonderful time with all the toys and Shelby has little bubbles come up from under her and her face starts to turn red. Especially happens when I just used the last diaper in my purse. I just barely found this out and it would have been valuable information about 1 year ago. If any of you use Pampers diapers or wipes then you need to read this!! There is a code on each product that I have never noticed until my good friend Kelly told me about it. Well if you go to Pampers. Well anyway they have gifts that you can choose from and you get them for free when you use your points towards them. I really want the trike that Kallie has and it is points. If you use pampers you should sign up. Clean clothes are overrated! Since having Shelby my clothes are pretty much never clean. There is either snot, slobber, spit up, or mystery gunk on me at all times. There is no use in changing because then you are sure to get extra dirty as soon as she notices that you have a clean shirt on. I have decided to embrace the dirt and wear it proudly. It took me so long to get Shelby here so I will relish my dirty clothes and only hope that one day I will be blessed with another snot, slobber, spit up, and mystery gunk maker. I would never complain about waking up in the middle of the night or early in the morning, because Shelby is totally worth it, but I never realized how much I love my sleep. I have been so lucky because Jon has been the biggest help in the whole world with this situation. Jon wakes up with Shelby and feeds her, gets her dressed, and plays with her. They usually go wash the cars or some kind of daddy-daughter activity on Sat. It is so nice because I can wake up and go straight to the shower and actually be ready for the day before 9am. Shopping is now just for her. I used to love to go shopping a get new purses, shoes, clothes or whatever else I felt so inclined to get. Now I find myself wanting to look at kids books, toys, or kids clothes. I even have caught myself a time or two going to the store just to look at bibs, exersaucers, car seats, or other paraphernalia for my little girl. I almost never want to look at things for me because it is way more fun to see her react to a new toys or book. It is awesome to hear her giggle and squil with glee. I have been SO lucky to have so many friends that have young kids to hang out with. I have my dental school friends, ward friends, bunco friends, and high school friends which is such a blessing. It has been so nice to bounce ideas around on how to parent and even just have some company. The kids really enjoy one anothers company too. I truely love each and every friend that I have and I hope that I can be there for all of them just like they have all been there for me throughout the years. So I have had to become quite the creative chorester. Laundry in our house is like the indy car race with the laundry basket. Shelby loves to go for rides! Cooking has a speacial BANG to it. Shelby loves to get into the tupperware and wooden spoons. Drums definately suit her. Taking out the trash has become a large detour around the parking lot songs included. In fact there seems to be a plethora of songs that I have created for each chore and some even have a sassy jig to go along with it. Even making the beds seems to take longer since I have a monkey that has to jump and jump until I make her "fall off and bonk her head". Yes, I get extremely creative so that I can still have the clean house that is so important to me. My meals are her meals. Each and everytime that I sit down to enjoy a wonderful meal or snack Shelby seems to come out from nowhere and sit right at my feet. She works up the biggest mooch face that she can with the pouty eyes and open mouth just like a bird. Sometimes she even eats so much that I am still hungry after "MY" meal. Resturants are the same way except then she points at Jon and I to make sure we are not confused with what it is that she really wants. Grandparents are a necessity. It has been so nice to have 2 sets of grandparents that are so helpful and loving. Both of them would get up in the middle of the night and feed squirt I had frozen milk. They cleaned and cooked and kept me sane during my more emotional times. I love getting the books, toys, and presents in the mail for Shelby. He also just takes her for walks around the house or watches sports center with her. Needless to say we LOVE grandparents, you can never have too many people love your child. Love has no end. Jon and I both never realized that you can love someone so much. We would do absolutely anything for our little peanut, she is so special to us. She has filled an empty hole in our hearts and we are so grateful to have her in our lives. It is amazing how each and every little thing that she does is so cute to us. We could just watch her forever. When she is sick it breaks our hearts and we would do anything to just take the pain away. We both would do anything for her, no matter what lengths we would have to go to. I know that if we are blessed to have another child that our love would grow again. We love you Shelby!!!

This article is part of the Building Character series. Get free article updates here. If you have, you surely know how it feels. It was dispersal time. I had gone to pick my son from school. His teacher stopped me to tell me that Jay somehow had managed to get into a scuffle with his friends and ended up beating one of the boys black and blue. I left her assured with promises to talk to him about it. Seriously, did he could he? Well! It took me quite some time, through his sobs and anger, to sweet-talk a few sentences out of him. When I heard them though, they staggered me. Suddenly, it was my turn to choke, with emotion. His explanation was simple. I have done my best to hone this, along with other values that really matter to us, right since we started to talk to each other about this some four years back. So in that moment, when his values were being questioned, he had responded in the only way he knew how. I settled him down and we continued with our day. Deep inside though, I had a lot to think about. To tell you the honest-to-god-truth, I was actually happy and proud of my son for protesting against a wrong. I made a mental note of still having work to do on the impulse control and emotional intelligence front. Being able to look beyond the immediate transgressions to focus on the bigger picture is an important aspect of positive parenting. But for now, I just want to celebrate this little victory – the little miracle of my 6 year old showing his strength of character by standing up for what he believed in, however misplaced the act was. We parents do enough of the guilt trips and too little in way of celebrating our small victories. Well, this mom is taking a stand. I will talk to his teacher and clarify what happened. I will apologize for the inappropriate way in which my son behaved and will do my best to work with her to come up with how we can guide him to handle things better next time. I will teach my son the tools he needs to stand up for what he believes in without causing trouble. However, I visualize my son being a humble person foremost, accepting contribution of others in making him achieve whatever he is. No man is an island unto himself and I would love it if he acknowledges the role of his mentors, his role models or whoever is helping him in carving out his achievements and personality rather than him being an arrogant achiever. This is a very important ingredient of happiness. How can you ever be happy without being content? I remember a rich boy in our class whom we assumed to be the happiest as he presumably always had everything. But with greater acquaintance I found out he never seemed to have enough of anything. He was constantly demanding more from his folks and was still not happy. I remembered being surprised even as a child because we as kids were truly happy with whatever little we had. Ambition is important to succeed but over-ambition can easily lead to unhappiness and I hope he avoids it. And I am a proud mother indeed when I see him strive to do things which can put him in my best books even at this tender age. Who would like a young man of 20 not having the spark or energy? Waiting for the right time for things and the ability to delay gratification is something the young really need to learn. I hope I can raise my son to be patient in his disposition and not be a restless guy. A young man was after a gemologist to teach him the nuances of the trade. After a lot of perseverance, the gemologist agreed. Each day he put a jade stone on the palm of the young man and got down to doing his daily chores. An honest individual sleeps well and has better odds of being happy deep-down compared to a swindler or cheat. I remember when Jay lied to me the first time. He conveniently emptied his bowl of cereals that he disliked into the bin and proudly showed me the empty bowl. It took me just a moment to know he was lying. That was the day I started questioning the effectiveness of traditional discipline techniques that rely on punishment. Fear of consequences is the major cause of dishonesty in young and old alike. Once we have the courage to face the results of our action, however dire they are, honesty becomes a priority in life. That brings us on to the next important virtue in life- courage. Fear and apprehension can dampen the learning process and courage to conquer the new makes it easier to find the focus. I hope my young man at 20 is courageous enough to explore himself and the unknown. Just the other day I was agonized by a picture that repeatedly kept coming back to me from various sources. It showed a terribly mutilated body shredded to pieces in a car accident. I shuddered to simply imagine how the concerned family would feel if it actually reached them. The hyper-sensationization of news in the media is creating a generation of numbed, indifferent people, and I sure hope my son can rise above it and keep his compassionate streak. Virtuous people need to listen, absorb, think and then act with strong impulse control and self discipline , more so than everyone else. Being harsh to self and to others works detrimentally in the process of learning while kindness is excellent in promoting teamwork. If my boy learns to be a kind leader, he would be not just successful but loved by all. I caught him in the nick of time and had to explain the whole process of electric current to dissuade him from doing so. On a much serious thought I really hope he holds onto the sense of curiosity and wonder at 20 and beyond because curiosity is indeed the mother of learning and invention! An optimist keeps a cheerful disposition and rings in positivity not just benefitting himself but those around him also. I was trying to test how good he felt being a part of his existing setup, his school, his friends and his family. I asked him what he would change if given a choice-his school, his group of friends or his family. His reasoning zapped me. He wanted the same setup that day and forever. Why should I change anything at all? He often teaches me so much more than I teach him. Appreciation of every little nuance of effort, the situation and those around us goes a long way in the quest for happiness. I hope my son retains his sense of appreciation for whatever life has in store for him and finds joy in how he deals with it. Just think of it how terrific it would be if they master the skill of being proactive in everything that they approach in life! I hope my son learns to endure the competitive pressures without losing his equilibrium as he makes his mark in his little world. Figuring out how to keep calm paves the way for other good things to follow. I hope my son finds his way to be mindful and stay serene in whatever he has in his lot. They often emulate parents by reflecting back whatever we do or say. I hope I show him the respect he deserves so he in turn learns to respect himself and those around him. To be a good leader, my child must know his own strengths and weaknesses and that of his team. To be a good leader he must be a good follower. Most often teams end up having all leaders and no followers! So it is vitally important to know when to lead and when to follow and I sure hope by the time he is 20, he has learned the nuances of this complex fact. Hope, light at the end of a dark tunnel, is what keeps the spark alive in life. And I hope this spark shines bright in my little boy as he turns 20 or Challenges are important in life. All these character qualities are great for learning and for life. They all in varying degrees help people build more confidence, earn more money and build stronger relationships. But hearing him out, the glimmer of hope and so much promise made me smile as I look forward to a beautiful life as his mom â€” teaching him and learning from him what makes life worthwhile. And I breathe easy knowing we are on the right track. We all goof up some or the other time. But celebrating our little victories and admitting and correcting our big mistakes is the way to go. Pamper your kid when he is good; talk it out with him when he is not. A right attitude to life can go miles in building that character. So for our contemplation questions, ask yourself this â€” What good character traits do you kids already have that make you proud of them and yourself as their parent? What additional good character traits do you hope to imbibe in your kids before they fly the nest? When was the last time you indulged yourself by celebrating a little victory? When was the last time you beat yourself up for failing? In general, what can you do to make sure that you celebrate little victories more, or at least as often as you beat yourself up? Explain your shortcomings or inabilities in cases where you feel you do not come up to the required standard without hesitation. Take a realistic approach to building character. Extreme expectations are more hazardous than beneficial in life.

Home Life 15 Touching Songs About Kids Growing Up. My little girl, my Gracie girl. The Spice Girls may have felt this way while growing up, and as a way of.

Raising a Powerful Girl How do you raise a powerful girl and what does that mean? Powerful girls grow up feeling secure in themselves. They learn to take action, making positive choices about their own lives and doing positive things for others. They think critically about the world around them. They express their feelings and acknowledge the feelings and thoughts of others in caring ways. Powerful girls will grow up to lead full, valuable lives. Encourage your daughter to pursue a passion. Let her choose her own clothes, within appropriate limits. Give her a voice in what after-school activities she participates in and how many she wants to do as long as it works for the rest of the family, too. What are the moments in your daily life when you can model the values you want your daughter to learn? Ask your daughter to consider three strategies she might use to deal with a situation, and then ask her about the possible outcomes. Let her decide what she wants to do within reason. Encourage her to take physical risks. Allow her to disagree with you and get angry. Lyn Mikel Brown, Ed. Help girls to make considered choices about how to express their feelings, and to whom. Make regular time to listen to your girl. Let her use you as a sounding board to sort out what she is going through, without solving problems for her. Listen more than you talk. But when we listen to them, they have to think about what they are saying, and they tend to reflect more. Help her process the messages in the media. Talk with her about the differences between sex in the movies and loving relationships in real life. You can talk about how sex is frequently portrayed without love, intimacy or emotion, or as part of caring relationships. When your daughter is old enough, you can begin to discuss what a mature, healthy, loving relationship “in which sex is a part” is all about. But we also need to put it into perspective, to stay calm and listen to what they are experiencing without projecting our own experiences onto theirs. Find activities you both enjoy and do them regularly together.

Chapter 4 : The Great Scott's: My little girlgrowing up so fast!

My little girl growing up so fast! I have been so lucky because Jon has been the biggest help in the whole world with this situation. Every Sat. and.

Watching our kids grow up can really feel like a time lapse. On one hand, you want them to stay your baby forever, and on the other hand, you want them to grow up and become whoever they want to be in the world. And knowing when to let go and realize that your kids are now adults is the true test of being a parent. To celebrate your baby turning into a responsible and successful adult, here are some songs you can add to your playlist. He had already written one for his son, Louie, but he knew Gracie needed one to. I hope we taught you everything you need to know, Gracie girl. And there will always be a part of me nobody else is ever gonna see but you and me. My little girl, my Gracie girl. Chase your dreams, but always know the road will lead you home again. Go on, take this old world. It even includes recordings of him and his daughter playing together. It shows just how much Stevie Wonder loves his little girl, even if she was just a minute old at the time! Less than one minute old. Elton John â€” Blessed You might be wondering why Elton John would be singing about children when he has none himself. Well, the song was penned by lyricist Bernie Taupin, who wanted to have a child before he grew too old. In this enchantingly heartbreaking song, the mother prays for her daughter as she embarks on her own adventure. This song will truly resonate with any mother who has a grown-up daughter. And help her to be wise; help me to let go. I am strong and wise, and I know no fear. But the truth is plain to see, she was sent to rescue me. Mothers want the best for their daughters, while willful daughters want to discover the world for themselves. So now I see through your eyes, all I can give you is love. Mama, I love you. Mothers will always have a special bond with their baby boy. If you are the husband as you have been the son, how lucky will be your bride. Keep being the man you have become. Carole King â€” Child of Mine This tearjerker of a song is just bursting with maternal pride for her son. You know which way to go. Oh yes, sweet darling. So glad you are a child of mine. You and Me Against the World is a song about a mother who has sworn to protect her child even if no one else is willing to help out. You and me against the world. Sometimes it seems like you and me against the world. When all the others turn their backs and walked away, you can count on me to stay. Nichole Nordeman â€” Slow Down Parents often get emotional when they see their kids growing up. And when it happens too fast, you just want to capture every minute of them being your little baby. Slow Down perfectly captures this feeling, as the mother begs her child to slow down and just be her baby for a little while longer. I know you want to walk through the door. I pointed to the sky, and now you wanna fly. I am your biggest fan. I hope you know I am. But do you think you can somehow slow down? The Ataris â€” The Saddest Song In this day and age, many parents end up separating, leaving the child without one important figure in their life while growing up. I pray I get the chance to make it up to you. Carlos Santana â€” To Zion Before the successful release of The Miseducation of Lauryn Hill, she had to make possibly the most important decision of her life â€” to pursue her career as a burgeoning artist or become a mother. Lauryn bravely chose both. This song is a celebration of her choice to keep her son as she pursued her musical career. And I thank you for choosing me to come through onto life to be a beautiful reflection of His grace. Neil Young â€” Here for You Neil wrote this song for his daughter, Amber, as she takes her last year in college. When your summer days come tumbling down, and you find yourself alone. Then you can come back and be with me. Listen to the sound of this old heart beating for you. Cat Stevens â€” Father and Son This classic folk rock song about a conversation between a father and son is one that resonates through men of all ages. There comes a time when a son must seek his own destiny, even when his father, whose intentions are pure, would like for him to live a more traditional life. For you will still be here tomorrow, but your dreams may not.

Sprinkle these beautiful girl quotes into your journals, cards, scrapbooks and letters! Let these quotes about girls express your deep emotions about the joy of having your girls in your life. Celebrate the charm of your girls with these girl quotes! The happiest moment of your life was the day she was introduced to the world. A girl is Innocence playing in the mud, Beauty standing on its head, and Motherhood dragging a doll by the foot. We won the gold! Heaven in her eye. How long is a girl a child? She knows what she wants and she asks for it. Not like these over-civilized little pets that have to go through analysis before they can choose an ice cream soda. I want to rule the world. Their dresses tied with sashes and futures tied with dreams. They are born with a little bit of angelshine about them, and though it wears thin sometimes there is always enough left to lasso your heart. And our hearts with love. Cole Where shall we see a better daughter or a kinder sister or a truer friend.

My Daughter Grows Up. Life is fleeting, years rush past and little girls grow up so fast! Let me take time out to be glad that mine's still here with me.

Sunrise, sunset, swiftly fly the years One season following another, Laden with happiness and tears Mothers and Daughters You can see it in their eyes in tender hugs and long good-byes, a love that only moms and daughters know. You can see it in their smiles through passing years and changing styles. You can see it in their lives, the joy each one of them derives in just knowing that the other one is there To care and to understand, lend an ear or hold a hand and to celebrate the memories they share. But as I long for wisdom And search for that distant light I think of yesterdays When I watched you sleep at night. And nothing that I touch In a sometimes lonely world Will ever mean as much As the love for my little girl. Then many a night she whispered low: She thought the same thing at three, And now that she is four, she sighs To think she cannot always be The youngster with the laughing eyes. Oh, little girl, my wish is not Always to keep you four years old. Where is my lipstick? Where are my hose-- The sheer ones hoarded these weeks to wear with Frocks the closets do not disclose? Perfumes, petticoats, sports chapeaus, The blouse Parisian, the earrings Spanish-- Everything suddenly up and goes. And where in the world did the children vanish? This is the house I used to share with Girls in pinafores, shier than does. I can recall how they climbed my stairs with Gales of giggles on their tiptoes. Last seen wearing both braids and bows And looking rather Raggedy-Annish , When they departed nobody knows-- Where in the world did the children vanish? Two tall strangers, now I must bear with, Decked in my personal furbelows, Raiding the larder, rending the air with Gossip and terrible radios. Neither my friends nor quite my foes, Alien, beautiful, stern and clannish, Here they dwell, while the wonder grows: Where in the world did the children vanish? Prince, I warn you, under the rose, Time is the thief you cannot banish. These are my daughters, I suppose. But where in the world did the children vanish? What is a Girl? Botsford Girls are made up of a number of ingredients. The delightful ones are engraved in the hearts of adoring fathers, and the others remind Mom of when she was their age! First of all, girls are experts at getting things done. They talk Mom into making a skirt for some special activity that falls due the day after tomorrow. They talk Dad into taking them, and a few friends, most any place at most any time. And they can, on occasion, clean their room neat as a pin, provided the occasion has something to do with a slumber party. Girls are particularly thoughtful of parents. Not wanting them to be bored, they are constantly thinking up interesting things for them to do, such as going along to a Camp Fire picnic, chaperoning a school dance and all sorts of fun projects. Girls are very good about volunteering. When there is a call for refreshments, daughters are quick to volunteer, "My mother will bake cookies;" or if they need transportation, "My dad will drive;" And she is quick to suggest, "You can meet at MY house. One day they are far too young to assume the responsibility for cleaning the house and the next day they are plenty old enough to wear nylons. Yesterday you had to remind them to wash their hands for dinner, and the next day they are spending hours putting up their hair and experimenting with makeup. The especially pursue these projects when it is time to set the table or wash dishes. Girls can spot their allowance as they walk in the door, but seldom see the dirty socks under the bed until after washday. They hear the radio only on loud volume and especially like the sound of the telephone ringing. Girls live by the clock, supplemented by notations on a calendar, and are usually on their way to somewhere or due back in just a minute. Wee girls are cuddly. Married daughters try to cook like Mother and wonder if they were ever as silly as their own daughters. Daughters are very special people. They can twist a very stern businessman into a normal submissive father, and give Mom hope in a future generation that will raise daughters just as she did. She had the best kiss on my knees. Oh, what a Mom--she can be. She has the best laugh in the land. And oh, how could you not notice, the strength of her hands? She could run interference better than any attorney around. And never ever, did she let me down. She taught me the right and wrongs of eye shadow. And there were times, she said yes, but really meant NO. Then on graduation- there she was-- front row seat, I knew she would. There was that tear, once more. Ahh, the day I come down the aisle. Oh, and there was that tiny little tear. The night the pain came. I was all afraid, she run to my side-- held my hand. Hold me tight dear, Mom is right here. In a few hours, it will be over and gone. And you will be holding a hand of your own. I looked at my Mom, and saw that tear, this time was different. I am lucky Mom, I got it from you. Little Shoes In the top drawer of her dresser is one pair of little shoes And a pair of little booties from which her Mom can choose. Although she cannot walk just yet, out with her mom she goes For strolls in different shades of pink from her head down to her toes. She skips onto the school yard with a step as light as air, While mom, though smiling bravely, feels at loose ends standing there. The little girl grows older, and with each passing year, Her first high-heels and cowgirl boots eventually appear. And then, as if by magic, the little girl is grown, She wears the latest fashions bought with earnings of her own. I wonder where the time has gone, and wistfully recall My little girl, in little shoes, so innocent and small. The top drawer of her dresser is filled with little shoes, And many pairs of booties from which you now can choose. Cherish each passing moment, the laughter and the tears, For days go by so swiftly, and gather soon to years. Be always there to walk with her when up against the odds, Make sure she knows that she can count on mother and on God. Baby Girl I remember when I was a child, you called me your baby girl-- golden hair in pony tails, melted chocolate on my fingers-- and I remember all the questions that I would ask you, Daddy, can you teach me to count to 10? Daddy, can you tie my shoes again? Can I have a tea party, Daddy? Will you read to me when we are through? I remember your dark hair, and how your eyes would shine at me lovingly-- you would teach me to count, and to tie my shoes, we would have a tea party, and then you would sit in a chair and read to me. And as the years danced by, I grew to be a young woman on my graduation day, you sat proudly in the stands, and later, you answered the questions I asked of you, Dad, can you help me with my resume? Dad, can you help me with my report? Can you make it to my party, Dad? I have someone I would like to introduce you to. As the time passed by, my success and career grew strong-- we always made time to see one another. I remember the visit when I told you, and had questions about my wedding day, Dad, honestly, how do I look in my dress? Will you walk with me down the aisle, Dad? When it is time, will you give me away? And you walked with me down the aisle, and when it came time-you cried and gave me away. And now with a husband, we have a daughter, she calls him daddy and asks questions like you and I. But even though she looks to us for all the answers in the world, I have questions you still answer happily, Dad, can you baby-sit your grand-daughter? Dad, can you help my husband fix the house? Can you teach me, Dad, to be everything to my child-like you have been to me? Now with my daughter at school, and my husband at work, I visit you often, your hair is white and face is lined, your eyes are heavy and now you have so many questions to ask of me. Baby girl, can you read me a book? Baby girl, can you tie my shoes and go for a walk? Can you boil some water and help me pour my tea? Weddings For poems about a daughter getting married see Here Comes the Bride. For My Beautiful Daughter I looked at you today and saw the same beautiful eyes that looked at me with love when you were a baby I looked at you today and saw the same beautiful mouth that made me cry when you first smiled at me when you were a baby It was not long ago that I held you in my arms long after you fell asleep and I just kept rocking you all night long I looked at you today and saw my beautiful daughter no longer a baby with a full range of emotions and feelings and ideas and goals as I continue to watch you grow And I want you to always know that in good and bad times I will love you and that no matter what you do or how you think.

Physical growth refers to the increases in height and weight and other body changes that happen as kids mature. Hair grows; teeth come in, come out, and come in again; and eventually puberty hits. The first year of life is a time of amazing change during which babies, on average, grow 10 inches 25 centimeters in length and triple their birth weights. But no child continues the rate of growth of infancy. No child grows at a perfectly steady rate throughout this period of childhood, though. Weeks or months of slightly slower growth alternate with mini "growth spurts" in most children. Kids actually tend to grow a bit faster in the spring than during other times of the year! A major growth spurt happens at the time of puberty, usually between 8 to 13 years of age in girls and 10 to 15 years in boys. Puberty lasts about 2 to 5 years. This growth spurt is associated with sexual development, which includes the appearance of pubic and underarm hair, the growth and development of sex organs, and in girls, the start of menstruation. By the time girls reach age 15 and boys reach age 16 or 17, the growth of puberty has ended for most and they will have reached physical maturity. During these, the doctor will record height and weight as they compare with that of other kids the same age on a growth chart. This valuable tool can help the doctor determine whether a child is growing at an appropriate rate or whether there might be problems. What Parents Can Do You can do a few things to help ensure that your child grows and develops normally. Sleep patterns vary by age and individual child. But most kids need an average of 10 to 12 hours of sleep per night. Sleep gives growing bodies the rest they need to grow well. A balanced diet full of essential vitamins and minerals will help kids reach their full growth potential. Bicycling, hiking, in-line skating, sports, or any enjoyable activity that will motivate kids to get moving will promote good health and fitness and help them maintain a healthy weight. Talking to Kids About Growth Kids differ in growth and development during childhood. And as with adults, some kids are taller or shorter. Generally, girls hit puberty earlier than boys, though some girls might lag behind their peers in breast development or getting their first period. All of this is usually normal. Try to avoid comparing growth among siblings or other children. Drawing attention to height, for example, will only make kids feel self-conscious about their size. Explain that some kids grow and develop at different rates and late bloomers usually catch up eventually. Kids have many questions about growth, from why their teeth fall out to tough or embarrassing topics like breast development or sweating. This will help them accept the changes positively. Kids who are short often face teasing by peers and may need help coping. For example, it might be hard for a small boy to make the football team. But focusing on alternatives, such as soccer or tennis, may make him feel better about himself and what he can do. Special skills and individual qualities, such as musical talent or a love of literature, are things to be proud of too. So it can be reassuring to know that most kids who are short or delayed in development are healthy and normal. For example, shorter parents tend to have shorter children and not all kids develop at the same rate. If you have concerns, talk with your doctor.

A number of factors go into determining how tall your child will be. Some of these are: Gender Boys tend to be taller than girls. Most people in a certain family will grow at similar rates and be of similar height. Health Status If a child has certain medical conditions, it can affect their growth. One example is Marfan syndrome, a genetic disorder that causes those who have it to be unusually tall. Conditions that may cause a child to be shorter include arthritis, celiac disease, and cancers. Also, children who took certain medicines, like corticosteroids used over a long period of time, may not grow as tall. Nutrition Overweight children will often be taller, while underweight or malnourished children may be shorter. There are several formulas that can estimate how tall a child might be. A girl is 31 inches at age 18 months. Add 5 inches for a boy or subtract 5 inches for a girl, to this total. Divide the remaining number by two. The results are usually within 4 inches, plus or minus. As a child ages, the growth plates become thinner. When a child is finished growing, the growth plates will disappear. A doctor can use a bone age study to determine how much longer, and taller, a child may grow. Girls and boys will typically experience a significant growth spurt in puberty. This occurs at different ages for each gender. According to Nemours , girls usually begin puberty between ages 8 and 13. During this time, they will start growing breasts and begin getting their periods. Boys will typically begin puberty between ages 9 and 14. Because girls tend to hit their growth spurts first, they tend to stop growing at a younger age, usually around age 16. Boys will often continue to grow until age 18. However, children grow at different rates. How long a child may grow can depend upon when they go through puberty. If a child goes through puberty later than most children their age, they may grow until a later age as well. This doctor specializes in hormones, including growth hormones that play a role in how tall your child is.
