

Chapter 1 : IT Security Jobs & Careers November | Cyber Security Jobs

The author of the first edition of How to Get a Job in Europe and other titles in the "How to Get a Job in " series, Dr. Sanborn was among the first career education professionals in the U.S. to actively advise college students about opportunities to work abroad.

Two perpetual expats settling into home country number five. It might be easier than you think. First of all, it helps a lot to have some sort of special skills, since an employer will probably need to be able to justify why you, a foreigner, were the best applicant for the job. Lucky for you, fluent English can count as this needed special skill for a variety of positions. Obviously, specialized and advanced degrees can help too, as can relevant job experience. No more excuses – now polish up your resume and get searching. Here are some suggestions to get you going: Open your mind wide. Instead, try to focus on all the different ways this could work out for you. Spend time brainstorming about the types of positions and companies that would interest you. Ask yourself whether your self-set criteria are necessary, and be open to considering changes. OK, now on to the more concrete stuff! Online networking. Connect with as many folks as possible. Poke around to see who they know in the countries or companies you are interested in. You never know which long-lost high school friend may have ended up as a hiring manager in Paris. This can be a good starting point to browse the local offerings and get a feel for what companies are hiring. In my experience, larger companies are less likely to balk at a foreign hire who will need a little paperwork filed for a work permit. Check out company home pages, which these days usually offer a list of open positions searchable by location. Universities, NGOs, and non-profits. Does your current company have any European offices? Many countries and major cities in Europe have one or more websites where expats gather virtually to share information and socialize. Employment is a topic that comes up often on these. Poke around for helpful information.

Chapter 2 : Cheryl Matherly (Author of How to Get a Job in Europe)

It also has a list of books the author recommends to those seeking international employment. Caveat: The resume samples are fine for seeking a US job, but European CVs are different. But overall, this is a great book for someone who knows they want to work in Europe but who hasn't focused yet.

I have checked with former USPS employees and they conformed that this book is accurate. This book is amazing. I start Monday, thank you. June 5, - Debra Ford This is a excellent book. It totally help prepared me for my exam. I would highly recommend it. This is the book to get. September 15, - Star Bought as a gift and after she used this book to study she scored 83 percent on the written test and got the job. I looked over the book and you need to make a commitment to study. I would definitely recommend it to anyone who wants to pass the exam for the postal service. March 29, - Amy Lindgren - TwinCities. Damp does a great job explaining everything from the step-by-step application process to what you can expect in the testing room to how the interviews are conducted. I especially appreciate the generous selection of test questions and the sampling of 24 job descriptions. This guide will also help your patrons to prepare for he relevant civil service test, the Postal Exam. Online updates to the material are provided at www. I found the memory section to be the hardest. Just remember as testing, they give you 7 minutes to memorize. Memorize the best you can and when the test starts, you will mostly be making an educated guess. When the test started, it was like tunnel-vision and the addresses looked Greek to me. They only give you your grade, they do not let you know what you answers you missed. I could have done really well on the first sections and totally flunked the memory test but I have no idea??? As, stated in this book, the reader does need to really study and prepare before taking the required postal exam. Or seek assistance from a partner to prepare oneself but the information to know is in this book. A top reference is the all-new sixth edition of "Post Office Jobs: Recommended by Library Journal, over a third of this outstanding book is devoted to testing, with realistic sample exams as well as tips and answer keys. Damp is a retired federal manager, business owner, career counselor and veteran. His new edition addresses all postal occupations from professional and administrative to mail carrier, maintenance worker, tractor trailer driver and clerical worker. August 25, - Review by True Grinder This book helped me score high on the exam and I got an interview within one week after taking the test. March 28, - Review by em Joe I placed an order for this Post Office book, and I received it in a couple of days, which provide an overview of battery exam and tips on the interview progress. Therefore, I prepared and studied for the battery exam, believe or not with only six hours of studying, I passed the exam. I was called in for interview, so I went to the book for some advice and what to expect during the interview. As result, I went to the next step which is medical assessment evaluation and passed that too. This book is a great buy, but just remember one thing to apply yourself to your studies with this book and you will have positive results. September 12, - Review by Rachael G. My husband and I read though this book over the course of 2 days, took the practice quizzes which were EXACTLY like the real computer test and I got an 86 and he got an Over the course of 11 chapters and three appendixes, Damp Book of U. Government Jobs offers a vital testing primer, incorporating challenging sample questions in the anticipated test format. Also included is an overview of the hiring process and a comprehensive positions list. Lansing MI "I read your book and then took the battery Test I reported for orientation and to fill out forms for the position I wanted, part-time flex carrier.

Will their job prospects be improved or not? Will it guarantee them the same freedom of travel? It must be a concern for everyone, regardless of how they voted in the referendum, that after a two-year wait for a government plan the main customs proposals have already been ruled out and warnings are growing about a damaging no-deal Brexit. UK could run out of food a year from now with no-deal Brexit, NFU warns Read more Viewed from the continent, it is hard to imagine that anyone in the UK voted for a no-deal outcome or to get poorer. While I should declare an interest as a former commissioner of the European Union, I want to stress that my major concern is how we ensure the best relations between the UK and EU27, in particular the social, cultural and educational links we share. Most obviously, there are around a million Britons who live on the European continent. This has been made possible by the free movement of people within the EU. Meanwhile, the Office for National Statistics has reported that nine out of the top 10 tourist destinations for Britons in were EU countries. This ease of travel is backed by established systems and arrangements for flights and healthcare. We have started taking this all for granted. Particular beneficiaries have been young people from the UK. More than , British students have taken part in the Erasmus education scheme since it was established in . Around a third of those students have had direct work experience placements. Hundreds of thousands others just enjoy the opportunity to travel, whether to the beaches of the Mediterranean, city breaks across the continent, or the Interrail experience. What kind of Brexit is being negotiated for young people? Will it safeguard their educational opportunities? Will they have the same quality of health cover? Already some of the longer-term signs are not promising, especially with the economic shock of a no-deal Brexit. This is also true with education. The number of pupils taking modern languages such as French and German has declined dramatically, as have the number of foreign language assistants. No wonder the British Council warns that more young people must learn languages if the UK is to remain globally competitive post-Brexit. I am currently in charge of the Alpbach Forum, the European festival of ideas. We bring together thousands of international experts to the forum in the Austrian Alps and offer scholarships for young people to take part. Because of the low number of applications from the UK there will be fewer than 10 British student participants. A participation rate of 1. It is not good enough. Brexit will ruin the lives of British citizens in Europe. We deserve a vote Jane Golding Read more I want to encourage the next generation in the UK to maintain links with the rest of Europe, and not weaken them. To that end I would encourage those with ideas, hopes and aspirations to have a look at what is happening at the Alpbach Forum this month and apply to take part next year. Europe is much more than the EU, but it is the main institution to improve our economic, social and cultural connections. British citizens, especially the young, will remain connected in many ways to the rest of Europe regardless of Brexit, and we must foster that. However, we cannot take it for granted. We need to work at it. I fear that this is being lost in all the drama of Brexit negotiations. There are now only two months scheduled to reach an agreement. The stakes are really high for the economy "€" but also for the next generation of young people from across the nations and regions of the United Kingdom. Surely we owe them the best future possible.

Chapter 4 : 7 tips for finding a job in Europe | This International Life

Louise Hunt For its size, the Gambia is experiencing a disproportionate number of people leaving the country. You are packed like sardines, you have to piss where you sit, you vomit, and the sea water burns your skin. You make the journey all because of poverty. He has put these experiences to good use, however. Danjo now teaches bore-hole drilling for a training scheme that aims to deter young people from attempting the perilous Mediterranean crossing by equipping them with the skills they need to get a job at home. But with the help of the project they learn skills to be self-sufficient. Villages suffer from poor sanitation, and infant malnutrition is rife. Most people rely on subsistence farming, but food security has been affected by a series of crop failures in recent years. Many of the young people who leave for Europe come from this region. In the main town, Basse, young people congregate outside stores, chatting in the 40C-plus heat under the shade of tin awnings. One of my friends died on the boat [in April]. A total of 60 to year-olds are on a three-year programme that began in It ends this December, and further funding is being sought. We want them to stay in their environment. He hammers home to the students his own experience of being paid a pittance as a labourer in Spain. When I was in Spain, I travelled for hours every day to do tedious work. Ousman Jallow, a former Leap student, is now a welder, running workshops for the project. It is better to have something here than to lose your life. And, with a growing number of peers having reached Europe, accounts on social media are a powerful lure. Daffy, 26, sells horserides on the beach in Banjul. It is very hard here because your family think you are a big man if you are in the city. More than half 56 said unemployment is the major problem affecting young people. Tackling youth unemployment is a priority for the Gambian government, and skills training and apprenticeship schemes are run through the National Youth Service Scheme. The charity is bringing together advocates from a range of professions to raise awareness among secondary school pupils of career pathways and scholarships at home. There needs to be more communication about the support that is available, so we are working with the government agencies on that. And there needs to be more discussion about what really happens to migrants in Europe. That is the elephant in the room.
