Perhaps the most famous examples came during the presidential campaign. Matthews repeatedly asked Malkin if she thought that Kerry "shot himself on purpose" in order to avoid combat or to gain accolades, noting that such an act would constitute a criminal offense. Matthews challenged Malkin to "say to me right now that you believe he shot himself to get credit for a Purple Heart-- on purpose. Matthews told Malkin that Hardball "is not a show for this kind of talk. Bush , appeared on Hardball. Miller had just given the keynote address at the Republican convention. Matthews took Miller to task for his statement that soldiers, not reporters, are responsible for freedom of the press, accusing the Senator of making the comment only "to get an applause line against the media at a conservative convention. Edwards asked Coulter to "stop the personal attacks" and accused her of "lowering the political dialogue" in America. At issue was a controversial speech made by President George W. One of the first instances was during the Florida election recount following the unclear results of the United States presidential election. He interviews fictional Republican presidential candidate Arnold Vinick played by Alan Alda and pressures him about his views on immigration. Welcome to Hardball, Arnie! Matthews received a credited cameo for recording the segments. This segment shows the lighter side of politics such as gaffes, appearances on other shows, and other humorous moments. A Republican strategist and a Democratic strategist debate certain topics of the day. A roundtable discussion about the political news of the day. Panel members offer up little-known or overlooked details about current stories. A brief closing commentary about events surrounding the administration of President Donald Trump. The Hardball Award[ edit ] The Hardball Award is an award created in that recognized individuals "who displays a combination of guts and political moxie to win not just the day but our fondest admiration. Afraid to attack her in public, Big Bad sweet talks Little Red into revealing where she is heading and then buys time by suggesting she picks some flowers for her gran. When Little Red turns up with a freshly picked bouquet, Big Bad impersonates granny before also eating Little Red whole, then promptly falls asleep. Who does not know that these gentle wolves are of all such creatures the most dangerous! Wolves may lurk in every guise! In these dreams Rosaleen lives in a fairytale village unsettled by strange wolf attacks. When Rosaleen arrives she finds that the Huntsman, who is in fact a werewolf, has killed and eaten her grandmother, but her emotions are confused- she is angry, afraid and attracted to the huntsman. After a scuffle where the Huntsman is shot, Rosaleen cares for the huntsman and opts to join his pack as opposed to staying with the villagers. Part nightmare, part coming of age story, The Company of Wolves is one of the best filmic interpretations of the LRRH story, exploring the traditional fairy tale in an original and exciting way. Jordan created a topsy-turvy world confusing dreams and reality, man and beast, fear and desire. Mixing violence and black comedy- Freeway gives us a Little Red that can more than take care of herself. Eluding social services, Vanessa takes off in a stolen car to seek out her grandmother. However Bob has met his match with Vanessa, who manages to overpower him, robbing him and leaving him for dead. With its ironic dialogue, lurid depiction of American white underclass and heightened violence, Freeway is the Little Red Riding Hood story on meth. Showing that you can have too much of a good thing, Bright followed this film up with Freeway II: Turning the story of LRRH on its head, Hard Candy is a confronting, disturbing and provocative film designed to make audiences squirm. This film questions who is the predator in the scenario, giving us a story of vigilantly justice. Hard Candy is a film completely unafraid of vexing its audience, creating a pedophile that is human, not monster or animal and a heroine that is violent and cunning. Shot over just 18 day, with only the two central characters for the majority of the film, Hard Candy is an impressive character piece. Cory and Todd Edwards, This animated film is the most light-hearted vision of the LRRH story, but by no means the least modern interpretation. Granny voiced by Glenn Close , who is tied up in a cupboard escapes and all chaos breaks loose when The Woodsman voiced by Jim Belushi busts through the window waving an axe. Cut to the police on-scene and each character is questioned giving their version of events. Added to the plot is an evil recipe-stealing bunny voiced by Andy Dick , and a subplot that takes a swipe at large corporations that dominate markets seriously.

News reports in local media have said the version of Wolf of Wall Street () showing in Abu Dhabi cinemas removes 45 minutes of content. Aside from nudity and sexual situations, most of the edits come from the film's + curse words.

Plot[ edit ] The film begins in an theater when a group of animals are preparing a show. The Fox, the host of the show, tells the audience they will tell three different stories. The place that most of the stories are take place is on a French farm led by the own animals. A Baby to Deliver[ edit ] In the farm, A Stork claims to have a broken wing and leaves a baby that most had to deliver to Avignon, with the name of Pauline, in the hands of a trio of farm animals: These last two proving immature and clumsy attitude, therefore potentially dangerous for the baby, the Pig tries to compensate for their mistakes so that the little Pauline finds her parents, even if he refuses initially to take care of it. After several clumsy and misunderstanding events, the trio manages to leave Pauline with his family, emotionally saying goodbye to her. The Pig takes this calmed, just so he can take the stork in a catapult and throwing him away. The Big Bad Fox[ edit ] A Fox who lives in the forest, has a failure time by trying to eat the chickens of the farm, one of them can easily protect herself in a violent way, and he always ended up eating radishes that the Pig always lefts to him. But the Chicks take him as their mother and he gradually gets attaches to them, to the point of deciding to protect them from the Wolf. The Fox decides to run away to the farm with the Chicks, once he fools the Wolf by eating radishes instead of the Chicks, and takes shelter on the farm by disguising himself as a Chicken. He discovers with horror that the Lead Chicken, whose eggs he stole, has sworn revenge and created a fox extermination club where she trains the other chickens for self-defense. The Fox manages to hide for some time, but he is betrayed by the behavior of his chicks who, persuaded to be foxes, bite their little friends at school and even bring him one still alive for dinner. The Fox tries to scold them, but the Chicks, disappointed by his fearful behavior, decide to return to the forest and make the Wolf their new mother. Discovered, the Fox is martyred by the Chickens, as he tries in vain to prevent the danger that runs the Chicks. Thrown out of the farm by explosives, while the Dog tries to convince with the Lead Chicken to help him, the Fox landed in the forest exactly in the arms of the Wolf that was about to eat the chicks. He helps them best and manages to hold the Wolf to the chicks run away. The Lead Chicken wants the Chicks to return leaving the Fox heartbroken, but the Chicks, moved, rush to him not to see him leave. The Lead Chicken decides to go in an agreement with the Fox: The Fox continues to see the Chicks regularly and, in exchange, he helps the chickens to train themselves to self-defense against other predators. The Pig tries to stop them but is dragged along with them to the city, then to the pound where the three animals are locked up in the company of a pack of dog-dogs. The cunning and resourcefulness of the three companions, fortunately, allows them to always barely get off the hook, and after some clumsy events, the Rabbit and the Duck see again a Santa clinging to a window sill, but this time it is the real Santa Claus that is in the window sill. They manage to save him, as a reward, Santa takes the trio back in the farm. The next morning, they wake up with presents. Epilogue[ edit ] After the three stories, the end credits begin with a return to the stage of all the characters of the film come to greet as in the theater. Various characters appear during the rest of the credits, including a frog sweeper to clean up the scene.
