

Chapter 1 : JLPT Level N5 Study Page

Thanks for this, I've been studying for the N5 exam (I initially thought about doing the N4 but I'm not going to take any chances and decided to go for the N5) and found about this practice book on the official JLPT website.

Just over a month ago I finally finished the Genki 1 textbook and Genki 1 workbook! So without any preparation or revision I decided to dive in and see what happened. Section 1 – Language Knowledge vocabulary In the first section the questions consist of choosing the correct kanji for sentences, identifying the readings, selecting the correct words to fill in sentences, and choosing some correct sentences. The kanji part is something I had feared, but to my surprise I seemed to remember a lot more than I had expected! The kanji you need to identify is used in example sentences, I think this made it a lot easier for me to recognise the correct reading of them. In this section you have 25 minutes to answer 33 questions, time wise I finished quite comfortably. Section 2 – Language Knowledge grammar and reading The second section consists of reading through sentences and short passages of text to identify key bits of information to answer the questions. I actually overran the time limit by about two minutes for this section, however this was because halfway through I went off to make a tea and forgot to pause the timer while I did! This section gives you 50 minutes to answer 32 questions. Section 3 – Listening comprehension The final section of the test is the listening comprehension. With the playback hurdle overcome, I continued with the final section. Once again I found myself quite surprised at how much easier it seemed in comparison to what I had imagined. The pace of the speech was relatively slow, the audio was clear, and the questions relatively short and quite easy. Each question is only played once. So what do those percentages mean? Well in theory, based on those percentages it means that I should mean actually be able to pass the actual exam, and with some actual revision I should comfortably pass. Unfortunately neither the answer key, nor online sources, provide the formula for how pass marks are calculated, or how much each question is worth. However the pass marks you achieve will be printed on your certificate, so scoring as high as possible will still have an advantage when it comes to showing off your certificate to people. Anyway there you have it, self studying using the Genki 1 books looks like it has gotten me to a comfortable JLPT N5 level. Genki 1 contains about vocab, and about kanji, and for N4 level the vocab required is about and about kanji. So Genki 1 alone is not enough to cover for all of the possible content that might appear in the N4. Just for fun I do plan on doing a N4 practice test at some stage, just to see how much more challenging it is.

Chapter 2 : JLPT N5 Study Material “ NIHONGO ICHIBAN

I gave this book 5 stars because of what I was expecting from this book and that is the layout of what the test is pretty much going to look like, it gives me a good idea on what the questions could possibly be, and it's all in Japanese so this is excellent for reading practice.

The site is a self-study site. We do not collect personal information or keep individual study records. You can utilize the materials based on your needs and at your own pace. N5-level is the easiest level of the JLPT. The test measures the level of understanding of basic Japanese mainly learned in class. You are expected to be familiar with hiragana, katakana, and basic kanji before taking the test. The major forms used in N5 tests are the long forms e. In addition, you need to have a strong understanding of usage of particles and adverbs. This site is designed on the assumption that users have taken one or two college level Japanese courses or have acquired equivalent knowledge. The test questions in this site are created by the author by analyzing vocabulary, sentence structures, and grammar of past N5 tests. The site is composed of three quiz sections: Each section consists of two parts: The three quizzes are as the same multiple-choice questions with four choices as the JLPT questions. This is about the half size of the JLPT. It has 18 vocabulary questions and 15 grammatical questions. This is the section where you recall what you learned, get a brief view of the N5 test, and grasp an understanding of your weak areas. Questions and Feedback under Study Room: The difference is that every time you choose an answer, you receive feedback. For this section, you need to take time on each question to check your understanding of the key point. Study Room is also equipped with kanji and vocabulary lists with over words and ten grammar modules. These grammar modules cover particles, verbs, adjectives, modifying nouns, conjunctions, adverbs and others. You can utilize these study materials based on your needs. Mock Test is the section to check your understanding. This puts you in a real test situation. You will receive your score right after submission. The score will become a barometer to assess your readiness for the N5 level test. You will find information on the passing score in this section. Now are you ready to take the short test? If yes, click the button to start!
