This French translation served as the impetus for an English translation in 1951, the Jerusalem Bible. For the majority of the books, the English translation was a translation of the Hebrew and Greek texts; in passages with more than one interpretation, the interpretation chosen by the French translators is generally followed. For a small number of Old Testament books, the first draft of the English translation was made directly from the French, and then the General Editor produced a revised draft by comparing this word-for-word to the Hebrew or Aramaic texts. The translation [edit] The translation itself has been admired for its literary qualities, perhaps in part due to its most famous contributor, J. Tolkien his primary contribution was the translation of Jonah. This view is not shared by Henry Wansbrough, editor of the New Jerusalem Bible, who writes, "Despite claims to the contrary, it is clear that the Jerusalem Bible was translated from the French, possibly with occasional glances at the Hebrew or Greek, rather than vice versa. The introductions, footnotes, and even the translation itself reflect a modern scholarly approach and the conclusions of scholars who use historical-critical method. It has also been widely praised for an overall very high level of scholarship, and is widely admired and sometimes used by liberal and moderate Protestants. The Jerusalem Bible is one of the versions authorized to be used in services of the Episcopal Church [6] and other Anglican churches. Translation of the tetragrammaton [edit] The Jerusalem Bible returned to the use of the historical name Yahweh as the name of God in the Old Testament, rendered as such in 6, places within this translation. If La Bible de Jerusalem had been followed literally, this name would have been translated as "the Eternal. On 29 June 1979, Cardinal Francis Arinze, Prefect of the Congregation for Divine Worship and the Discipline of the Sacraments, wrote to the presidents of all conferences of bishops at the behest of Pope Benedict XVI, stating that the use of the name Yahweh was to be dropped from Catholic Bibles in liturgical use, [9] most notably the CTS New Catholic Bible, which uses the Jerusalem Bible text as well as from songs and prayers, since pronunciation of this name violates long-standing Jewish and Christian tradition. A third French edition was produced in 1988. In 1988, the English translation was completely updated. This new translation is known as the New Jerusalem Bible was freshly translated from the original languages and not tied to any French translation except indirectly, as it maintained many of the stylistic and interpretive choices of the French Jerusalem Bible. In 1988 the Catholic Truth Society published the CTS New Catholic Bible, consisting of the original Jerusalem Bible text revised to match its use in lectionaries throughout most English-speaking countries, in conformity with the directives of the Congregation for Divine Worship and the Discipline of the Sacraments [11] [12] and the Pontifical Biblical Commission. The revised text is accompanied by new introductions, and textual and liturgical notes, supplemented as needed with material from the notes to the New Jerusalem Bible. The French portion of the Demonstration Volume is available online, together with a single sample of the English translation. The New Testament and Psalms was published in February 1988, and the complete Bible will be published in late 1988. Substantially revising the JB and NJB texts, the new translation "applies formal equivalence translation for a more accurate rendering of the original scriptures, sensitivity to readable speech patterns and more inclusive language.
