Opera House of original production: Mariinsky Theatre Original orchestration: Liza burns with desire for Herman, but the latter is gradually devoured by his passion for gambling, obsessed with a magic formula that will bring him fortune. While elegantly depicting Russian aristocracy, he devotes his finest skills to the terrible figure of the Countess, the infamous Queen of Spades. Summary The story takes place in Saint Petersburg at the end of the 18th century. Herman loves Liza, a young woman above his situation who is engaged to Prince Yeletsky. Her grandmother is an old and mysterious Countess. In her youth she lived in France where she learned the secret of three winning cards, which she used to accumulate a considerable fortune. Little by little, the secret becomes an obsession and Herman seems willing to do anything to learn the winning formula. Unable to pry the secret out of the old woman, who dies of fright, Herman loses sight of his love for Liza, who commits suicide. But he ends up going mad and killing himself in turn. Act 1 While obsessed with gambling, Herman is also infatuated with Liza, a young woman raised by her grandmother, an old Countess reputed for her wealth. If she reveals the secret to another person, she will die. Herman sees a way of improving his fortunes so he can marry Liza, who is engaged to Prince Yeletsky. Thunder and lightning, hell or high water, nothing can stop him. He must be careful as the Countess keeps a watchful eye on the young woman. When Liza begs him to leave, he declares his love for her and threatens to kill himself if she loves another. Liza confesses her feelings to him. During a ball, Prince Yeletsky notices that Liza is sad and reassures her of his love, in one of the most beautiful arias written by Tchaikovsky. Later that night, Herman sneaks in, determined to discover the secret of the three cards. Hiding in the shadows, Herman emerges and threatens her with a pistol, but she refuses to reveal the secret and dies of fright. Then he goes to find Liza, who is ready to run away with him. But suddenly Herman dismisses her and rushes off to test the secret. Liza throws herself into the Neva. In the gambling house, Herman wins a fabulous sum at first, before becoming wild and distracted. Challenged to another hand by Prince Yeletsky, Herman is sure to have the winning card, but when he bets the ace, he discovers that the third card is in fact the Queen of Spades. Overcome with despair, he stabs himself to death.

Chapter 2 : La Dame de pique – Wikipédia

La dame de pique est un jeu de cartes prise de truc pour quatre joueurs. Le jeu est également connu comme; Chasse Coeur ou Hearts.. Dans ce jeu de cartes joueurs doivent essayer d'éviter de gagner des points de pénalité pendant le match.

Two officers – Tsurin and Chekalinsky – enter, the former complaining about his bad luck at gambling. They remark that another officer, Herman, seems obsessed with the gaming table but never bets, being frugal and methodical. Herman appears with Tomsy, who remarks that his friend hardly seems like his old self: Herman admits he is in love with a girl above his station whose name he does not even know. When Prince Yeletsky, an officer, strolls into the park, Chekalinsky congratulates him on his recent engagement. Yeletsky declares his happiness while Herman, aside, curses him enviously. Catching sight of Herman, the two women note they have seen him before, staring at them with frightening intensity. Herman realizes that Liza is his unknown beloved. When Yeletsky and the women leave, Herman is lost in thought as the other officers discuss the Countess: Tomsy says only two men, her husband and, later on, her young lover, ever learned her secret, because she was warned by an apparition to beware a "third suitor" who would try to force it from her.

Scene 2 At home, Liza plays the spinet as she and her friend Pauline sing a duet about evening in the countryside. Their girlfriends ask to hear more, so Pauline launches into a sad ballad, followed by a dancelike song. As the merriment increases, Liza remains pensively apart. A Governess chides the girls for indulging in unbecoming folk dancing and asks the visitors to leave. Pauline, the last to go, urges Liza to cheer up; Liza replies that after a storm there is a beautiful night and asks the maid, Masha, not to close the French windows to the balcony. Alone, Liza voices her unhappiness with her engagement; she has been stirred by the romantic look of the young man in the park. To her shock, Herman appears on the balcony. Claiming he is about to shoot himself over her betrothal to another, he begs her to take pity on him. When the Countess is heard knocking, Liza hides Herman and opens the door to the old woman, who tells her to shut the windows and go to bed. After the Countess retires, Liza asks Herman to leave but is betrayed by her feelings and falls into his embrace. Yeletsky passes with Liza, noting her sadness and reassuring her of his love. This is where the famous aria ya vas lublyu is sung. Herman receives a note from Liza, asking him to meet her later. The master of ceremonies announces a tableau of shepherdesses. Kozlovsky is played and sung in greeting. As she dozes off, Herman stands before her. She awakens in horror as he pleads with her to tell him her secret. When she remains speechless, he grows desperate and threatens her with a pistol – at which she dies of fright. She orders him out and falls sobbing.

Act 3[edit] Scene 1 In his room at the barracks, as the winter wind howls, Herman reads a letter from Liza, who wants him to meet her at midnight by the river bank. Dazed, Herman repeats the three cards – three, seven, ace. At last he appears, but after uttering words of reassurance, he starts to babble wildly about the Countess and her secret. No longer even recognizing Liza, he rushes away. Realizing that all is lost, she commits suicide. Yeletsky, who has not gambled before, joins the group because his engagement has been broken: Settling down to play, they are surprised when Herman arrives, wild and distracted. Yeletsky senses a confrontation and asks Tomsy to be his second if a duel should result. Herman, intent only on betting, starts with a huge bet of 40, rubles. He bets the three and wins, upsetting the others with his maniacal expression. Next he bets the seven and wins again. At this he takes a wine glass and declares that life is but a game. Yeletsky accepts his challenge to bet on the next round. Herman bets everything he has on the ace but when he shows his card he is told he is holding the queen of spades. The others pray for his tormented soul. Principal arias and numbers[edit] Act 1 Aria:
