If you have doubts, ask anyone who went to their sold-out show at the Freeman Coliseum on September 7th. They played to a packed house of rock fans that spanned at least three generations, a feat that only the upper echelon of rock bands can accomplish consistently throughout the world. To see the full album of Scorpions photos, click here. His powerful vocals, delivered with confidence and conviction, were never less than extraordinary. The twin guitar attack and hard-rocking rhythm section churned out quite an impressive performance, and the crowd went wild every time they struck a chord. La Torre encouraged crowd participation during all the big hits, and the audience, a sea of black shirts bathed in LED lights, obliged him on several occasions. By the end of their set, they had fans running back to the merch booth to buy a second t-shirt! This slideshow requires JavaScript. The fans ate it up. Screaming, headbanging, and even gasp! That tit-for-tat intensity being shared between the performers and their audience lasted the entire show! Schenker was absolutely amped up for this show, and he really gave the audience his best. He never stopped moving, constantly running to the front of the stage in multiple quite successful attempts to get the audience to lose their shit. They did, every single time. He ran through his rolodex of rock star moves and poses, hitting them all by the end of the night. Schenker was as cool as could be in his skinny jeans and white leather-and-studs jacket. His actions looked effortless, but he never stopped smiling or encouraging the crowd to react. Drummer Mikkey Dee was hidden away on a high-rise drum platform, but his playing was breathtakingly brutal, and every kick to his bass drum was a punch right to the gut. During his nearly ten minute drum solo, his riser lifted up, sending him skyward while he deftly whipped the skins to an insane rhythmic pattern. Evidently, the band thought so, too, and Klaus Meine was quick to bring up his time spent with the metal legends. They did Lemmy proud. One of the most impressive things about the Scorpions is that massive collection of fantastic material they have. His voice, one of the most recognized and revered in rock music, is still clear and emotive, and he had many moved to tears with his soulful cries and pleas for angelic assistance. Everyone knew the words, and the sound of the crowd was loud enough to drown out the band. They had already rocked us to our core, and we had already begun to lose our voices from screaming. After a much-deserved standing ovation, they returned for a two-song encore. Jabs and Meine took center stage, standing back-to-back, a vision of hard rock glory. They tore into the song, leaving it all on the stage for the fever-pitch crowd. They were reliving past glories, but they were still having a hell of a time in the present, a perfect reminder of how to age like a badass. We can still rock out, still have a great time raising hell and singing along to the music that has provided the soundtrack to our many late nights, bad decisions, and after-midnight Whataburger runs. Time holds no sway in the house that rock built, and though the Scorpions are approaching the end of their career, they still have plenty of Sting left in the Tail.

Chapter 2 : What a Crazy World () - IMDb

"Live Above This Crazy World" combines all three of these elements to release new inner powers that lift you far above the nonsense of society. You'll live in a lofty place that is as free and clear as the open sky, and there will be nothing anyone can do to pull you back down again.

Trump is an effect, not a cause. There is a putrid stench fermenting just beneath the surface of 21st-century society, and it birthed Trump, not the other way around. Nothing about the man himself is particularly unique or noteworthy, in my opinion. I try to stay away from politics on this site and write about more universal themes. Too much college education? From less teenage pregnancy? Seriously, I was dumbfounded "safe from what? What the hell do we need to be made safe from? Violent crime is at an all-time low, international wars are at an all-time low, there have been precipitous drops in domestic violence, steady declines in drunk driving-related deaths, death from infectious diseases and a rock-bottom child mortality rate. This sense of insecurity seems to be universal, even if couched in different language. Hillary has talked about the need to escalate the war on terror in order to protect us" an oxymoron for anyone who has been awake the last 15 years. And this is coming from one of the highest profile journalists on the planet. It seems these days that there is this omnipresent feeling that the world is going fucking crazy. I, too, feel desensitized and dejected from the seemingly constant carnage raging across the planet. After all, I never felt this way 10 years ago or 20 years ago. So things must be worse, right? As Ta-Nehisi Coates put it: In the attention economy, people are rewarded for extremism. The internet has generated a platform where apocalyptic beliefs are celebrated and spread, and moderation and reason is something that becomes too arduous and boring to stand. And this is what disturbs me: We are going crazy. Each one of us, individually, capsized in the flood of negativity, we are ready to burn down the very structures on which the most successful civilizations in human history have been built. How did this happen? And how can we stop it? The fuel of this mobilization, of course, is outrage. Outrageous news and information spread faster and further than any other form of information, dominating our daily attention. This is both good and bad. On the one hand, we become aware of some of the grossest injustices in our society as soon as they happen. On the other hand, all we hear about are the grossest injustices in our society as soon as they happen. This is our brave new world. When all information is freely available at the click of a mouse, our attention naturally nosedives into the sickest and most grotesque we can find. We become only exposed to the most extreme negative aspects of certain groups of people, giving us a skewed view of how other people in the world really think, act, and live. When we are exposed to police, we only see the worst. As a result, it feels as though everyone is an angry fucking extremist and is full of hate and violence and the world is coming undone thread by thread, when the truth is that most of the population occupies a silent middle ground and is actually probably not in so much disagreement with one another. We judge groups of people by their weakest and most depraved members. And to protect ourselves from the overreaching judgments of others, we consolidate into our own clans and tribes, we take refuge in our own precious identity politics and we buy more and more into a worldview that is disconnected from cold data and hard facts. This is no longer about wasting time on Pokemon Go or refreshing Facebook 12 times a day. Instead, I am attempting to go back to learning about the world only through long-form journalism that has been thoroughly researched and vetted before being published. Is this far less convenient and way more time consuming? Does it make me feel like a cranky old man to all my friends? But people have seemed to conveniently forget that freedom is earned through internal sacrifices as well. But the last couple decades, I fear that people have confused freedom with a lack of discomfort. They have forgotten about that necessary internal struggle. And if people continue to lose their ability to stomach it, then I fear one day it will be gone. You can opt out at any time. See my privacy policy. Footnotes No, a rich, narcissistic, opportunistic demagogue seeking power through a message of fear and hate is sadly not unique or noteworthy in politics. The phrase has been employed in my lifetime to justify the interventions in the Middle East and I still have a hard time seeing how Saddam Hussein threatened my ability to blog.

Chapter 3 : Keith Urban: Love, Pain & the Whole Crazy World Tour Live: DVD: Keith Urban

Do you think we live in a crazy world? I used to think so. There always seemed to be a constant stream of bad news. From war, to famine, to economic crisis, to environmental catastrophe, the world always seemed to be on the brink of collapse.

One writer, when commenting on why Christians seem to have little impact in the world, said, "It has never ceased to amaze me that we Christians have developed a kind of selective vision which allows us to be deeply and sincerely involved in worship and church activities and yet almost totally pagan in the day in, day out guts of our business lives and never realize it. We are seeking a better land, where God is ready to receive us as His children. We are like Abraham, who looked for a heavenly land. For those who say such things declare plainly that they seek a homeland. And truly if they had called to mind that country from which they had come out, they would have had opportunity to return. But now they desire a better, that is, a heavenly country. Therefore God is not ashamed to be called their God, for He has prepared a city for them. We should realize that this world is temporary, while those spiritual things are real and eternal. For the things which are seen are temporary, but the things which are not seen are eternal. We must not become entangled in the things of the world. If anyone loves the world, the love of the Father is not in him. We are to put God above everything else in the world. And do not be conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind, that you may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God. We are to live our lives righteously toward those who are outside the body of Christ. We are to be careful concerning our relationships with those who are not Christians. Let your speech always be with grace, seasoned with salt, that you may know how you ought to answer each one. We are to conduct ourselves in such a way as to not bring shame and reproach upon the body of Christ. We are to live separate lives from the world. For you are the temple of the living God. As God has said: I will be their God, And they shall be My people. Therefore "Come out from among them And be separate, says the Lord. Do not touch what is unclean, And I will receive you. We are to love those who are lost. We are to have a burning zeal for lost souls. I have become all things to all men, that I might by all means save some. We are to have an attitude of love and compassion toward each other as brothers and sisters. We are to forgive one another. We are to have a genuine concern for a brother who turns from the way. One army sergeant, who was addressing a group of soldiers going into a foreign town on leave for the first time, wanted to impress upon them the importance of proper behavior. He said, "Men, you are the United States. These people will think either badly, or positively of our country, based on your conduct! What people think of Christ and Christianity is often based upon what they see in us. Copyright by Grady Scott may be reproduced for non-commercial purposes at no cost to others.

Chapter 4 : Live Above This Crazy World - American Society of Dowsers

Crazy World Tour Live. 1. Bad Boys Running Wild LYRICS 2. Hit Between the Eyes Crazy World LYRICS 9. Can't Live Without You.

In 1 Timothy 3: What is "the mystery of the faith? You see my friend, God gave us free will to make choices. He decided NOT to make us simply robots who would love Him, serve Him, obey Him, but make that an act we choose to do on our own, out of our love for Him. It is this free will that God gave you and me that allows us to make decisions throughout the day to obey, or rebel against God. The problem with free will is that it allows us to ignore the Absolute Truth God gave us in His Word. It allows us to ignore the black and white reality of right and wrong. The Bible in places refers to how we are left to our "own imaginations. That is fine, but since we all have free will, what is right to you may be wrong to someone else. And what is wrong to someone else may be right to you. Do you see the chaos this creates? Unless there is a standard, unless there is a guide, what is right and wrong becomes something each person decides for themselves. The issue that I want to deal with today, is that as Christians, as believers in the Lord Jesus Christ, we have been called to a higher standard of living. Those great heroes of faith recorded in Hebrews chapter 11 understood that we are NOT citizens of this country, but of another country! While for this season we are in this world, we are no longer OF this world once we commit our hearts and lives to Jesus Christ. I am in no way saying we are to separate ourselves from this culture we live in. Jesus said we were to be the "salt of the earth," the "light of the world. Many scoff at the Biblical example Christ set when He said if we lust in our heart we have already sinned. My friends, yes, the sex drive, hormones, emotions are all very normal. But God created us above the animals. We are not to be slaves to our natural drives, but to be in control of them. God has given us the power over our flesh, over our natural, carnal desires. To deny this is to deny the power of God that resides within you. We can love others. Not in our own strength, but in the strength God gives us. We can forgive those who treat us wrong. We are here to serve others, not to be served as the world would like us to believe. We can not do that not in our own strength, but in the strength God gives us. You see my friend, as a follower of Christ, as a Christian, we have not only been called to a higher way of living, but given the power to do it!!!! The fact is, when we surrender ourselves to live a higher life, a life God has called us to, we are blessed above and beyond all we could ever imagine. Not always in earthly blessings but in REAL blessings. They are not for sale. And they only come from living a life God has called His children to live. So many are afraid of "missing out". The only thing you gain from rebelling against God is some temporary pleasure, that always leaves you wanting more. Temporary happiness, that turns quickly to pain. You sell out the real things of God, for the momentary gratification of this world that quickly turns into dark despair. I love you and care so much for you. One of my goals each day is to help you live the high calling God has called each of us to. We must never forget that we are different. Our personal relationship with Christ is what makes us special. It is something the lost of this world can not comprehend. Because of His love for us, because of that special relationship, we have been called to live a higher life during our brief journey here. We must never forget that it is NOT our life, but our life belongs to Him. We are called to die to self daily so that HE may live through us. This is a daily process that we all must go through. But it is because of this daily process of dying to self so that Christ can live through us that we can live the higher life He has called us to live. Please know that I will be praying for you today. Praying that you will take these words seriously. Realize today, maybe for the first time how special you are to the Lord. Realize today, maybe for the first time that as Christians we are called to live a higher life than the lost around us. It is in living this higher life that the hurting, the hopeless, the lost of this world will ask us what is so different between our life and theirs. It is then that we can share with them the hope and love we have in Christ Jesus. As followers of Christ, we are called to a higher standard of living. Let us live for Him each day and proclaim to this world through our very lives that He is the way, the truth, and the life!!!! In His love and service, Your friend and brother in Christ, Bill Keller About LivePrayer LivePrayer was founded for the sole purpose of having a site on the internet where people can go 24 hours a day, 7 days a week for prayer. The entire core mission of LivePrayer is to give those who are hurting

Chapter 5 : HOW SHOULD WE LIVE IN THIS WORLD?

The Crazy World We Look Above. 43K likes. all about the crazy things that are done in the world, and some awesome pics, enjoy.

I used to think so. There always seemed to be a constant stream of bad news. From war, to famine, to economic crisis, to environmental catastrophe, the world always seemed to be on the brink of collapse. I was completely uninspired by the idea that I should go to school, go to college, work until I was 65, then retire and die. I can understand why the world appears so crazy and so fucked up, but actually I think the world is a pretty cool place. A large part of this stems from the fact that, children are isolated from the adult world for so long. You are wrapped in cotton wool and kept away from the real world through an extra decade of schooling. You learn about the world from inside a classroom, instead of experiencing it for yourself, learning how it works and learning how to make your own way. Childhood can be magical. The teenage years can come with a lot of problems but they can also be pretty special as well. The college lifestyle is out of this world awesome. But when the real world comes it hits hard, because it is so unexpected. It freaks people out. I certainly lost my bearings and I know a lot of others who did as well. The real world is when you realize that you have to make a living to survive and that nothing in life is free. When it comes it feels like the end of your freedom. The idea of working hard used to bother me because I felt entitled to an enjoyable and materially comfortable life with minimal effort on my part. Because up until the point I hit the job market it had come with minimal effort. I come from a middle class family with divorced parents. Comfortable enough, but not rolling in it. I, like many, finished my college years with a wonderful academic education but very limited useful skills and a mountain of debt. I saw work as an arduous chore that had to be endured, rather than a way for me to contribute to the world. I went through a phase of romanticized visions of getting back to nature and going and living somewhere in the wilderness, Henry Thoreau style. In fact, now that I understand it better and how it works, I quite like it. These are my tips on how you can live in this crazy world. Make Peace With The World The first step in learning to live happily is to make peace with the world. A lot of the negativity is essentially propaganda, because in the media, fear sells. The world is in fact a wonderful place with a lot of opportunity where great things are happening. Focus on the opportunities rather than the problems. You have no control over where or when you are born. You are not responsible for the problems of the past, nor is it your responsibility to fix everything. Studying history and economics helps you to figure out why the world is the way that it is. Studying business and personal finance helps you make a contribution to the world and to improve your own circumstances. Slowly you will figure out why things are the way they are. Understanding what drives the world, will put you at ease. Do you feel responsible for changing the world? A desire to make a positive change is awesome. Feeling responsible is a burden. Your own life and your own happiness is the priority. Whichever direction you want to change things, there are people with different views pulling in the other direction. There is a long history of competing ideas all working to shape the world in their own image. You can take part in that battle and contribute to pushing things in the direction you think is best, but realize that you are but a small cog in a much bigger machine. Rather it is to recognize that there are powerful forces of ideas shaping the world. You can make a positive change in the world. It might be small or it might be of Gandhi like proportions. Not just in my own life but everywhere. How could I be happy when others in the world were suffering? The world will never be perfect. In fact by choosing happiness you actually make things ever so slightly better because there will be one more happy person in the world. You just have to get on with life and decide to be happy in the present despite all the imperfection. Otherwise you will be waiting for happiness your entire life. You know it will change their life the way it changed yours. The problem is, no one else seems to care. Everybody is on their own journey of discovery. You can put your ideas out into the world in a peaceful way, and people can pick them up if they want. But there is no need to shove it down their throats. Your natural productivity is whatever you can build with your hands and your immediate surroundings. Anything else in life you have to earn. We are mollycoddled through school when we should be taught to harden up. We are conditioned to disdain manual labour and productive enterprises such as farming and mining in favor of intellectual pursuits that produce nothing. Understanding this basic concept freed me from being a snotty, self inflated, entitled holder of a college education who was afraid of hard work. It turned me into someone willing to get his hands dirty and put in the hard yards to get what I wanted out of life. I stopped expecting things to fall in my lap and went out and made things happen. Or you can go out and take life by the scruff of the neck and create what you desire. Focus On Improving Yourself Once you get over complaining about the world and get over the need to save it, you can start prioritizing yourself. Start focusing on how to get the most out of life. You may have wasted many years being a grumpy, whining complainer and now you need to shift into becoming a successful, positive and active doer. Commit to serious personal development. Decide who you want to be and what you want to achieve in life. Then implement the right habits that will get you there. For me it is diet and fitness, business and investments. I want to be healthy, I want to work hard and make money and I want to grow that money. You may have different priorities, but whatever they are, stop making excuses and start making them happen. Imagine your life if the world were perfectly the way you wanted it, and you had an unlimited amount of time and money. Daydream about what you would do and how you would spend your days. Then make sure that you prioritize those things in your life. You can do those things right now that make you happy. For me these are things like: Traveling and exploring new places. Spending quality time with friends and family. Spending time with my significant other and building our relationship. Regardless of how crazy you think the world is, or what your personal circumstances are, love is always there. Humans have been pairing up since the beginning of time. In times of prosperity and times of famine, in times of war and in times of peace, in times of joy and in times of sadness, people have dedicated their lives to one another because of love. You need nothing else to experience love other than the two of you. No matter where you are in the world or the circumstances you live in, this precious and beautiful human experience is available to you. It is a constant that you can hold onto in times of turbulence. The nature of love is that it is imperfect. Bring two imperfect people together and that is the inevitable result. There is no perfect woman for you. Instead you have to find a woman who is mostly perfect for you and then work hard on the rest of it. This liberates you from the idea that you have to keep trading up to a better girl and allows you to get on with the hard but rewarding job of loving another human being. You just have to start loving and create your own version of perfection as you go. Conclusion We live in what can be a crazy world at times. There is plenty to dislike about it, but also there is plenty to get excited about. If you can make peace with the world, you take a huge burden off your shoulders and you give yourself permission to live with your happiness in mind. You just have to start enjoying and making the most out of life right now. When you stop trying to change everybody else and start worrying about changing yourself, suddenly it becomes very possible to live the life of your dreams.

The chorus was quite literally a chorus, as the entire crowd sang along, thundering above the sound of Jabs' slick guitar playing. "Rock You Like a Hurricane" closed the show, as we all knew it would, and the band brought the house down.
