Looking Ahead Who Do You Want For (www.nxgvision.comnees) submitted 4 months ago by dawgfan Royal Blood is currently blowing up and yes they'll be here next month but it would be great to see them.

We just finished a series of lessons about Christian growth. Hopefully you learned a few things about your own personal growth in your relationship with God. Notice the following formula that someone put together. Trying to do anything without God is vanity. Thus we read in our study of Ecclesiastes. So we cannot be successful without God in the picture. That is why we need to look up. True wisdom is ours only by revelation and the revelation comes from God. He is the source of spiritual insight. Wisdom is more than knowledge about God. It is a personally experienced knowledge of Him and a willful submission to His will. Without this knowledge of God spiritual growth is impossible. That can only be done through continued effort on the part of every one of us. If you want to grow spiritually you need to make up your mind and ask God to show you where it is that you need to grow. Maybe there is an area in your life that you would personally like to grow, ask and it will be given, seek, and ye shall find, knock, and it shall be opened unto you. I know that God wants us to grow spiritually. I want to see not only you grow spiritually, but also myself. A hunger and thirst for God. When you are thirsty and hungry what do you do? You satisfy that thirst or hunger by getting something to drink or eat. You eat three meals a day, but how many times a day do you feed your soul? I pray that the eyes of your heart may be enlightened, so that you may know what is the hope of His calling, what are the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints, and what is the surpassing greatness of His power toward us who believe We are here for each other. We are to show our love and support for each individuals growth in Christ and pray for the strength to deal with the issues of the world. All the while keeping our faith strong and vibrant. We do have the privilege of addressing our God and Father by prayer. We need to keep that lifeline active as much as possible. God has spoken to us via the Bible, and we must learn as much as we can so that we will do things that are pleasing to Him. Learning to love others is one of the greatest commands, and practically all of our Christianity is based upon our love for our fellow man. Showing love is fulfilling the whole law of Christ. But also remember that growth is an individual choice that only you can make. We can encourage you, but it is your choice.

How do you learn to ride well? Differences Imagine The road is just motorcycle heaven. Actually, they meet at the moment that one of them overtakes the other, in a corner. The overtaking motorcyclist waves his hand after having passed the other, to greet. It is not always the case that the fastest bike is the fastest one in corners. Possible, but not probable. Did the overtaker just ride more miles than the one who is being passed? It could be the case, but not necessarily so. Is it just luck than, being born with the right talents, the right genes? After all it is perfectly possible to be the owner of a fast motorcycle, and having done lots of miles, but still not be a really good motorcyclist. Keep learning Riding a motorcycle means that you learn all your life. Everyone learns, after having passed the exam, by means of permanent self-study. And like in the case of self-study, support can make the difference between gaining slowly, or passing in a corner. There are a few basic techniques that everybody can train. Some people train them automatically; for others, it gets easier when the techniques are brought to their notice. You probably heard it many times during your lessons: During your lessons, you probably learned to look in the direction where you want to go when practising small circles and figures of eight: But looking ahead is not only important when riding in small circles. Looking ahead is the basic ingredient of motorcycle riding. Training Training your capabilities to look ahead probably is the most effective way to enhance your riding capability. Visor and glasses In the first place, make sure that the circumstances are right: And always keep your head upright, also when cornering and the bike is inclined. Did he see me? So the idea is that you are responsible for your own safety, whether the traffic around you behaves as it should or not. That means that you must learn to see which dangerous actions the rest of the traffic will take, or which actions people might take. Predict mistakes You should have thought long enough in advance of the possibility that the one car that you see coming towards you in a sidestreet, might "forget" that you are the one who has the right of way, and he is the one who should yield. That car in front of you, decelerating and steering to the right and blinking his right blinker, could very well decide to steer to the drive access on the left, exactly at the moment that you are passing him. It is an often occurring cause of accidents, cars showing that they want to go to the right, turning to the left at the last moment. That car driving towards you very well could, exactly at the moment that you ride by, turn to the left. What is going to happen? Developing a sixth sense So you should learn to foresee every crazy action of the rest of the traffic, so that you are prepared. As you will see, you will develop some sort of a sixth sense for these situations: You will develop a sort of internal list of mistakes that occur often. When somebody makes such a mistake, you will have seen it before he makes the mistake. The longer you ride, the more kilometers or miles you have ridden, the bigger your list of possible stupid actions gets, and the less often you will be taken in surprise. Practise on the highway On the highway, you can train yourself in looking by checking whether you had "foreseen" everyone who passes you. If that happens without having foreseen it, you should have checked your mirrors more often, or you should have been better in calculating and remembering. The best country to practice, is of course Germany ;- Off the highway you practice by telling yourself everything you notice. Know what you cannot see: That tractor driving towards you, could hide an invisible, hasty car, that could overtake the tractor without noticing you. A sign for a bar at the side of the road? That means a drive access, so somebody can come out of it, or somebody around the corner could stand still to drive into the drive access. Every obstacle blocking your view can hide a moving object vehicle or person or animal. Friday evening A totally different kind of non-visible danger is for instance the knowledge that it is friday evening: In France, you have to be extra alert, for the same reason, after every meal. During your riding career you will develop a list of "suspected situations". In case you cannot be seen Remember that, the other way around, there are many situations in which you form a non-visible danger for others, for instance when you pass a truck when approaching a crossing. There is a really brilliant English movie showing some of the many situations that you will have to learn. Practise by telling yourself You can practise by telling yourself, during a trip, everything that might lead to possible danger. The more often you practise, the more you will notice these things automatically. The road has gone

The road may speak to you The road itself can tell you lots of things. At the moment that the road suddenly is gone, you realise how much you trust a road to "behave" as you expect it to do. Objects such as trees or telephonepoles may predict the route your road will take but not always! Most of the time, irregularities in the side of the road means there is a drive access or a side road. You will notice when there are no markings! Interrupted white lines are put closer onto each other at "difficult" stretches, and you will automatically slow down on such stretches. A double uninterrupted lines means that you are riding on a dangerous stretch. Practise looking far ahead Most of the time, you already study the surface of the road consciously. Practise to remember to look far ahead: How do you ride through slow-driving traffic? One of the common mistakes is, again, looking too much in front of your front wheel. When you do that, you will probably swerve instead of riding a straight line. When you keep looking far ahead, you will be perfectly able to ride in a straight line between the cars. At certain points, you can expect difficult situations: Disappearing lane When one of the lanes disappears further on, you can be certain that many cars will try to go to the next lane long before. The best thing to do is switch to the space between the next two lanes. When you do that, watch out for fellow-motorcyclists! Fellow motorcyclists When you decide to split lanes when the traffic around you slows down, you have to be especially careful: The one behind you has the right of way! When you decide to go splitlaning, you have to behave in exactly the same way as when you decide to overtake someone: The other way around also applies: He might decide to ride between the lanes exactly at the moment that you are passing him! Lane switching of cars When the traffic jam just developed, there are more changes of lanes then when the traffic jam has "settled". Near acceleration and deceleration lanes, you have to be extra careful: You always see a wheel turning just before a lane switch. And in some cases, you will even see a blinker before someone switches lanes ;- . You also often see a car first moving to the other side before turning towards you. Space between cars Be extra alert when there is an opening between two cars: A car may be hidden before a truck. Doors When cars in a traffic jam are really stopped, you may expect doors opening: When you see somebody behind you, find an opening and let him pass: Look at yourself Dare to look at yourself One of the most important aspects of learning how to look, is learning how to look at yourself. You should treat that as valuable information from which you can learn, and not as negative criticism telling you that you did something wrong. Looking wide See everything at the same time Ultimately, you should become able to keep looking "wide" in every circumstance. Process information You will observe that the longer you look wide, the more information can be distilled from what you see. You see something moving, not on the road but somewhere on your right, a car, a bicycle. So you are prepared for a side street long before you see the road itself. So watch out for slippery muddy roads. Practise You can practise looking wide too. Remember that it is never necessary to train yourself to look nearby: The problem is in training to look far ahead, end to the sides, and to keep looking like that. Your eyes tell your brains: And then you realise that it might be a good time to drink a beer. Remember that after the beer, the "look, see, understand" will be a lot harder to perform fast enough, so better take an alcohol-free. The problem lies in what your brain decides is important, and the conclusions that you draw or not. A very dangerous situation with that respect is when a car is waiting at a crossing which is empty. A truck comes by, and in the mean time you arrive, from the other direction, invisible because of the truck. The car driver now is strongly inclined only to see what he expects: So the chance he will not see you is big.

Chapter 3 : Tips for Looking ahead while riding a motorcycle

Definition of look ahead: to think about what will happen in the future The past year has been successful and, looking ahead, we expect to do even better in the coming months. “often + to Looking ahead to next year, we expect to be even more successful.

This post is the second in a four-part series on the story of Pres House. You can find part one here. Coming soon, Mark will explore the two remaining steps: Your eyes are two of the most important parts of your body when riding a bike. Yes, your legs turn the pedals, and your heart pumps the blood. But your eyes direct where the bike is going to go. When you watch someone learning to ride a bike you will notice they often look down at their pedals or at the front wheel. I know from experience that does not work well! If you are looking down you will wobble all over the road. To ride forward, you must look forward. In fact, you need to look at the spot you want to go to. If you look at the curb while riding, you will almost certainly hit the curb. If you look directly at the pothole you want to avoid, there is a good chance you will fall right into it. But if you look up the road at the part of the pavement that is clear, that is where you will go. You will go where you are looking. There are countless good ideas out there, infinite causes worth supporting, endless options for how to spend energy, time, and money. But many of these ideas are side streets on the road. They are distractions from the real direction you are headed. The same principle applies when building a ministry or organization. The first and most important step to getting somewhere new is to fix your attention on where you want to be. Not on where you are now, not on the obstacles in the path, but you must fix your attention on where you want to be. When we arrived, there were zero students, the building was run-down, and there was not enough funding to pay for our salaries and other expenses. But the board of directors knew where they wanted to go. They wanted to relaunch and grow an active, thriving campus ministry to undergraduate and graduate students, build an apartment community on the parking lot, renovate the year-old chapel building, and develop a funding plan to cover the expenses of a comprehensive campus ministry center into the future. They wanted to completely rebuild and reshape Pres House for decades to come. The vision was bold. We knew where we wanted to go. So we fixed our eyes up the road. The first thing I did in my new job was put together a desk from a kit and get the phones working. I fixed the toilet with paperclips. I caught the bats that came in through holes in the roof. I made literally millions of decisions about programs, policies, and construction designs in the first few years. But I tried my hardest to not get distracted by the potholes or the side streets that popped up along the way. I kept my eyes focused on where we wanted to go and looked straight towards that vision. Speaking the Future Into Reality In all honesty, when Erica and I were interviewing for the position at Pres House, we had very little idea what we getting ourselves into or what we were going to do to carry out the vision of the board. But we knew one thing for sure—we knew it was going to take some time to realize the vision. We asked the board if they would commit to us and the effort for at least 7 years, and we agreed to do the same. We knew that the destination we had in mind was many miles away and that it would take years of pedaling for us to reach it. We took a long view with our eyes fixed on where we were going. What did that look like practically? It meant that we thought about and described Pres House, not as it was, but as it would be. We talked about Pres House a full-fledged, thriving campus ministry—even before it actually was. We spoke its future into existence. We put aside the cheap newsletters and brochures made in-house on a small printer and started producing professional-quality publications. Because that is where we were going. That is the level of organization we were becoming. We redesigned the website, cleaned up the building, created a new logo, made new signs—all to signal to ourselves and others that Pres House was going somewhere and was going to be something. And we stayed laser-focused on the vision for the future by saying no to more things than we said yes to. For the first year of our ministry, we said no to all programming. Instead of organizing activities or hosting events, we made a commitment to spend an entire year learning about what was happening on campus, getting connected with our board and other leaders in the area, and listening to students and their needs. We said no to partnerships that were no longer moving Pres House in the right direction. We even said no to ideas that board members thought we should try right away. We kept our eyes on the road ahead and stayed focused on where we were going. There are always more good and important things to be done. Any pastor or nonprofit leader knows this well. That will leave you wobbling along and not getting very far. Instead look up and ahead to where you want to be. Look ahead to where you want to be. Say no to the things are not moving you in the right direction. He is married to Rev. Erica Liu, and they have two daughters. When not hanging out with college students, Mark can be found training and racing his bike in the hills surrounding Madison or trying to keep up with the silliness of his daughters. Mark is available for consulting and coaching conversations with ministry and nonprofit leaders, boards of directors, or organizations seeking support to launch, grow, or rebuild.

Chapter 4 : Look Ahead to Where You Want to Go | The Institute for Youth Ministry

If you look directly at the pothole you want to avoid, there is a good chance you will fall right into it. But if you look up the road at the part of the pavement that is clear, that is where you will go.

Personal Success moving forward , success factors There are nine success factors that you must know in order to start moving forward in life. Each one of these success factors has been proven to be critical to the achievement of the best life possible for any given person. By systematically implementing one or more of these success factors into your life, you can put your foot on the accelerator of your own career and achieve the best life for yourself.

Education The first of the nine success factors is education. In our society, the highest paid people are those who know more than the average. They know more of the critical facts, ideas and information than the average person in their field. As a result, they can make a more valuable contribution to a knowledge-based society and live the best life possible. They are valued more, respected more and ultimately paid more money and promoted more often.

Skill The second of the nine success factors that you can use to achieve the best life possible is simply skill. Your level of ability in your field will determine the quality and quantity of your results. The better you get at what you do, the easier it is for you to start moving forward to get a particular level of results. As you increase your skill, through study and experience, you get better and better at doing the small things that increase the speed and predictability of your results. Find the central core to your existence so you can begin to live by your own personal code.

Contacts The third success factor for moving forward and achieving the best life is by developing an ever-widening circle of contacts. You will find that every major change in your life is accompanied by a person or persons who either opens or closes doors for you. The possibility of the best life for you will be determined by the number of people who know you and like you and who are willing to help you. In order to broaden your network of contacts, you must network continually, at every opportunity. There seems to be a direct relationship between the number of people you know and how successful you are.

Money Having money in the bank gives you greater freedom and the ability to take advantage of opportunities when they come along. If you are broke, or in debt, you have very few options open to you. One of the most important things I ever learned in life is that you are only as free as your options. If you have no options, you have no freedom. If you are stuck in a dead-end job that you cannot leave because you have no money set aside, you have put a brake on your potential. You are locked in place and have no option for moving forward. You can end up spinning your wheels and losing months and years of your time by the very fact that you have no choice but to accept whatever is being handed to you.

Good Work Habits The fifth of the success factors that enables you to get far more done in a shorter period of time is simply good work habits. Developing good work habits requires that you think before acting. You make a list and set priorities on the list before you begin. Good work habits require that you consider the likely consequences, positive or negative of what you are doing.

Positive Mental Attitude The sixth success factor for your career and life is to reduce the amount of time that it takes you to achieve your goals is by developing a positive mental attitude. A positive mental attitude is very much a decision that you make. Remember, you become what you do. If you engage in the same activities that positive, confident, optimistic people engage in, you will eventually become one of them and live your best life possible. Anyone can remain positive when things are going well. It is your ability to look for the good in every situation that you see positive and start moving forward in life.

Positive Image The seventh of the success factors you can incorporate into your lifestyle, and one that can help you achieve the best life for yourself, is the development of a positive image. People judge you by the way you look on the outside, by the way you appear. The fact is that you judge everyone else by the way they look on the outside, as well. Taking time to present an attractive image in your person, your clothing, your grooming and your accessories can have an inordinate impact on the doors that open for you and the people who are willing to help you start moving forward in your life.

Creativity Creativity is another wonderful way to start moving forward in life and to increase the speed at which you achieve your goals. Creativity is something that requires that you continually look for better, faster, easier, cheaper ways to get the job done. Remember, one good idea is all you need to start a fortune.

Character

Perhaps the most important of the success factors to accelerating your life is your character. Self-discipline combined with honesty will open countless doors for you. Trust is the foundation of all relationships. When people know you and believe in you and are convinced that they can trust you to keep your word and do what you say you will do, they will feel that they are far more likely to get the things they want through you, to get the things they want, faster, sooner, easier and with greater certainty. Thank you for reading this article on moving forward and living the best life possible. Do you know of any other factors that can help you become successful and accelerate your career? Chapter 5 : Job Interview Question and Answer Guide

*If you want to define looking, you might differentiate between the image that your eyes transport to your brains (roughly about everything within your field of vision), what you *see* consciously (much less), and what information you distill from what you see (the meaning that you give to what you see).*

I thought of the many issues concerning student mental health and my tenure at Penn. Rather than contribute to the volumes of verbiage that already take up so much space, and having listened to you for so many years, I thought I would just tell a story. As part of the training, there is an interesting problem presented. You are riding comfortably in the middle lane of a big highway. In front of you is a large flatbed truck carrying refrigerators. Suddenly, without warning, one of the refrigerators falls off the truck and crashes in the center lane in front of you. What are you to do? DO NOT look at the refrigerator. If you look at the refrigerator you will hit the refrigerator. Look to one side or the other. You will go wherever you look. You will not hit the refrigerator. Look where you want to go! Trust me, you will always be aware of the refrigerator. It is very compelling. It is in the middle of your road. You cannot deny it. You cannot pretend it is not there. But right now, do not hit the refrigerator. There will be lots of time to understand why the refrigerator fell off the truck and how it got in the road in front of you. You can become an expert in loading trucks with refrigerators and how to best secure them. You can fully explore and understand the problem. You may even examine why you were so close to the truck in the first place. But for now, look where you want to go. But all of us have refrigerators, maybe a couple. They come in all shapes and sizes. Or maybe it could look like a conflict with a good friend or lover. It could be that disappointing feeling that you have let down your coach, or teammates, or worse, your parents. It might seem unavoidable. It might be nagging or it might be frightening. It can be very powerful. But I know you have one. And if some day, when you are not quite aware, it falls in front of you here is one thing you will remember: Sometimes it is a little counterintuitive to know where to look so you might want to practice. If you fear you are faking it, support someone honestly. You get the idea. Look where you want to go. This is not easy. Sometimes you might need help looking where you want to go so ask a friend, or counselor, or coach, or teacher, or parent, or mentor, or € just ask. And if your refrigerator takes the shape of asking for help, then offer to help a friend. They have refrigerators too. One of the best places to look when confronting a refrigerator is at the support from your community, whatever that means to you. That is often the safe place that misses the refrigerator. We insure the continued security of that safe place by looking at it and seeing it. It takes care of us and we take care of it. Practice looking outside your lane because there will occasionally be a refrigerator in front of you. Look where you want to go even when there is no refrigerator. Care for that space whether it be a place or a person or a family or a friend or an idea or a community. Or all of the above. You will know that by looking where you want to go you do not hit the refrigerator. But also consider this: It is the refrigerator that reminds us about the safe places to look. Sometimes refrigerators have a way of introducing us and guiding us to the safer place. Ok, sometimes they force us. Do not be afraid of the refrigerators. We all have them. And because we know what to do about them, they do not scare us. And we are much more secure and confident on our motorcycle. This video walks you through the entire concept of look ahead (for Fridrich F2L) by first introducing the concept, then teaching you how to learn it. The video finishes with some helpful practice.

Some people seem to fit in well, do their work, and usually get the perks — opportunities, raises, and promotions. Still others are disgruntled and bitter, rarely doing anything beyond the bare minimum, loafing every chance they get, and simply filling up space until a reason comes up for them to be turned over. The people in that first group are the ones that get the raises, the promotions, and the opportunities. This phenomenon is true no matter what the job is, from a computer programming shop to a research lab or a fast food restaurant. Some people come in the door and look for opportunities to get ahead. Others go in, watch the clock, do their work, and get their paycheck. Still others try to throw sand in the gears. If you want to get ahead, here are fourteen tactics you can use, no matter where you work. Go to work well-rested and presentable. Never show up to work looking like you just rolled out of bed. Take a shower, wear clean clothes, use deodorant, brush your teeth, and do your best to look presentable. Also, get a good night of sleep before work so that you can be as mentally and physically fresh as possible. Every interaction you have in the workplace will reflect either positively or negatively upon you, and you can very easily increase the positive-ness of those interactions by just taking a half an hour to make yourself presentable. Even when supervisors are seeking comments on other workers, hold back on the negativity and look for what positives you can find. Negativity in the workplace drags everyone down and positivity lifts everyone, so stick with the positive. Avoid it at all costs. If you have an opportunity to discuss other workers or particular situations, you might perceive that piling on those workers or those situations will benefit you — rarely is that actually true. Instead, look for the positives you can outline about anyone or anything. If you have downtime, find something useful to do. That downtime is key in separating the people who get ahead from the people who get left behind. Clean up your workspace. Clean up the store. Work on a low-priority project. Instead of falling into that trap, try to give your complete focus to the task at hand and do it as best you can. Learn from and emulate the people who do their job well. As a result, they have job stability, plenty of options, and likely a very solid salary. Learn from these people. Ask them plenty of questions about how they get things done. Watch what they do, particularly with their downtime. In some situations, it might even be appropriate to ask them to be your mentor. Build positive relationships with everyone in the workplace. You do nothing but gain from building a positive relationship with everyone in your workplace, from the highest level of management that you can easily interact with to the person who empties the trash cans. Be friendly to everyone. Ask how their day is going. Find some common interests and talk about them. Every workplace seems to have a poisonous person or two. When you do have to interact, stick with the facts and get back to your own tasks. Get your work done and move on with life. Want to guess who the one person was that received a raise and then, later, a promotion was? Improve yourself in your spare time. The simplest way to do this is to work on getting in better shape. Get some exercise and eat a healthy diet. Doing this will improve both your energy and your appearance, things that are purely beneficial in any work environment. If you have a job that requires some specific skills, find ways to improve those in your spare time as well. Keep up to date on your specific area of knowledge. Learn what you would need to know to take the next step in your career. Step up to challenges when they present themselves. Step up to the plate and give it your best shot. If you think it might be over your head, ask for help when you need it. When difficult situations occur, every workplace benefits from having someone they can rely on as a leader. Be the person that speaks for the workers during a meeting. Own up to your own mistakes. If you mess up and you inevitably will, admit to the mistake and do what you can to rectify it. The winners are the people who own up to those mistakes and then go the extra mile to fix the created problem. Stand up for yourself when you want a raise or promotion. If you want a raise or a promotion, be clear about it. Ask your supervisor directly for what you want — and be able to make a good case for it.

Chapter 7 : Look Ahead | Definition of Look Ahead by Merriam-Webster

It helps you determine where you are headed and how you want to get from point A to point B. It narrows your focus. Determining specifically what you want to do, helps you be more intentional about how you spend your time.

Shutterstock As entrepreneurs, leaders, managers, and bosses, we must realize that everything we think actually matters. If we are seeking success, we must think successful, inspiring, and motivating thoughts. Read on to find the words of wisdom that will motivate you in building your business, leading your life, creating success, achieving your goals, and overcoming your fears. Make that one idea your life--think of it, dream of it, live on that idea. Let the brain, muscles, nerves, every part of your body, be full of that idea, and just leave every other idea alone. This is the way to success. Stop giving away your time and talents--start charging for it. The purpose of life is to give it away. Life is about creating yourself. Wisdom is knowing when not to do it. Your reaction is the problem. As of this second, quit doing less-than-excellent work. The more they succeed, the more they want to succeed, and the more they find a way to succeed. Similarly, when someone is failing, the tendency is to get on a downward spiral that can even become a self-fulfilling prophecy. Discouragement and failure are two of the surest stepping stones to success. And guess what they have planned for you? So you have to trust that the dots will somehow connect in your future. You have to trust in something--your gut, destiny, life, karma, whatever. This approach has never let me down, and it has made all the difference in my life. Winners can tell you where they are going, what they plan to do along the way, and who will be sharing the adventure with them. No reasons or principle contain it or stand against it. I want to have lived the width of it as well. Habit is what keeps you going. If you believe in yourself and have the courage, the determination, the dedication, the competitive drive and if you are willing to sacrifice the little things in life and pay the price for the things that are worthwhile, it can be done. It is the motivation we to choose that matters most. Oct 9, Like this column?
