Nursing Major. Description: A program that generally prepares individuals in the knowledge, techniques and procedures for promoting health, providing care for sick, disabled, infirmed, or other individuals or groups.

If you are considering this exciting, growing and rewarding field, you should consider these many awesome reasons to pursue a career in nursing: The population of the world is living much longer and will need to have more medical care. So, hospitals and medical facilities are always looking for nurses. You can work when you want and where you want. Do you want to work part time, full time or as a temporary hire? You can do all of them. You can take time off for work and find work fast when you want to come back to the field. You can work three days in a row and have four days off, and be full time employed, too. Nurses are the key link between doctors and patients. Every situation is different, but many times the patient will interact a great deal more with the nurse than the doctor. Many nurses find that this is one of the most personally rewarding fields they can imagine. You may work in a city hospital, in the suburbs or in a rural area. You can work in any state and any country in the world. If you become a freelance consulting nurse, you can travel to work in most cities in America for a few days, weeks or months, and then move on to another place. You will find there is nursing work available wherever you go. You can work in the justice system as a legal nurse consultant, or in trauma care or wound care. You might work as a writer, teacher or a researcher. There are no end of options when you become a nurse. You also can earn time and a half for working on holidays and weekends. The field offers relatively good pay, and you easily can increase your earnings by working more hours, and working on holidays and weekends. There are many professionals who retire from their first career and continue to work part time as a nurse to supplement their income. This will certify that you are an expert in that particular speciality. This will often cause you to earn a higher salary and to increase the demand for your services. Whatever your interest in nursing, you can probably find a specialty that interests you.

The decision to allow students to choose their minors in nursing school varies by institution. Attending nursing school comes with a host of important decisions to make about the future. Choosing the right minor can make an enormous difference in the marketability and income potential for prospective nurses. Talking to a nursing school advisor will help students make the best decisions about what minor they should choose when beginning a nursing program. When nursing students get the facts, they can begin their journey to becoming nurses. Many programs only allow students to choose from specific minors to go along with their respective nursing degrees. These minor programs are generally created according to the demands in the nursing field, and they usually help to make nursing students more marketable once they graduate. A few examples of the minors that nursing students may choose in such programs include integrative human physiology or health promotion. Students must notify their advisor if they plan to pursue a minor along with their nursing degree. Other programs allow students to work with an advisor to come up with the best minor to accompany their careers in nursing. Advisors help students find minors that match up well with their respective nursing curriculums. The advisors may suggest typical nursing minors such as nutrition, psychology, or sociology. Nursing students have complete control over their decision for a minor in some nursing programs. Many use their personal interests outside of the nursing profession to choose a minor. For example, some students may be interested in music, foreign languages, math, or political science. They have the freedom to enter their minors at will with no decision-making power given to the nursing programs or advisors. Popular Minors Nursing Student Choose Some of the most popular minors in the field of nursing include psychology, nutrition, sociology, foreign language, physiology, mathematics, business administration, healthcare administration, geriatrics, recreation, creative writing, hospital administration, and journalism. The nursing minors all depends on the personal interests of the students. It makes since to find minors that make students more marketable and can bring in the highest income potential possible. Many of these minors can enhance the joy that nurses experience on their jobs. For example, those who choose journalism or creative writing minors may write stories told by their patients and even publish some of the inspirational stories that can help other patients experiencing the same issues. A minor in administration may help those who aspire to run a nursing agency or hospital. Nurses can also use a minor in administration to pursue their dreams of owning their own businesses. Another area of interest may be nutrition. This minor can help patients improve the moods, health, and stamina of their patients so that these patients can live longer, healthier, fulfilling lives. A minor in a foreign language can also be very beneficial. It can be very helpful to speak the native tongue of patients when they are receiving medical assistance in their time of need. Patients can feel more comfortable and at peace with someone who can relate to them. Another great minor is psychology because it helps nurses understand their patients and themselves. It is important to create strong relationships with the patients and families since they spend a significant amount of time with these individuals. How to Choose a Minor in Nursing School Choosing a minor in nursing school is very important to nursing students. They should use this opportunity to expand their knowledge to make themselves as marketable as possible in the nursing profession. Some may choose to find a minor that takes them outside of the nursing realm to offer services that enhance patient relationships. Some nursing students have a clearly defined idea about how they want to merge seemingly unrelated majors and minors into something that can be a wonderful asset in the nursing industry. Many may want to stay with a minor that their advisor suggests so that they can improve their relations with patients, family members, employers, and coworkers. Some want to move up the ladder in the nursing industry and this is the perfect way to do so. It is okay to listen to the ideas of others, but the final decision lies in the hands of nursing students. They have to be comfortable with their decisions since it is their futures. Choosing a minor is one of the most important decisions that nursing students will ever make in their lives. It is important to take some ownership in these decisions so that they can have long, happy careers that they enjoy for years and years to come. Thinking about going to Nursing School? Chapter 5 : What Minor Should You Choose for Nursing School?

A course in health assessment will be one of your first nursing classes. In it, you'll practice the art of taking a health history and conducting a physical exam to form an accurate picture of a client's health, arrive at a diagnosis, and design a plan of care.

Advanced Concepts in Public Health Ph. DNP programs tend to focus on practical nursing applications and are usually better suited for students planning to work in high-level administrative positions at a healthcare facility. Both types of programs can open the door to earning faculty positions at institutes of higher learning. Some core courses may include: After earning a nursing degree, most graduates seek to obtain employment at hospitals, long-term care facilities, private practices or other healthcare settings. Though state laws determine the specific tasks that registered nurses and licensed practical nurses may perform in the workplace, the nature of the jobs vary by sector and employer. Regardless, all nurses must take the National Council Licensure Examination NCLEX in order to become certified as either a registered nurse or licensed practical nurse. Their duties vary by state and position but usually include administering medical treatments and medication, observing patients, educating patients and families about illness, assisting with diagnosing injuries and illness, recording patient histories, and offering emotional support. Special Certifications or Licensures: RNs must be licensed by the state in which they practice. They must also complete some postsecondary training. Their roles differ from RNs in the duties they may undertake and the amount of education they have undergone. Typical tasks include monitoring patients, assisting patients with bathing and dressing, changing bandages, recording patient information, and extending emotional support to patients. LPNs and LVNs usually participate in approved career training programs that last approximately one year. They must also meet any other licensing requirements of the state in which they practice. Certified Nursing Assistants Certified nursing assistants support doctors and other nurses by administering basic care for patients in a variety of healthcare facilities. Sometimes referred to as nursing aides, these healthcare professionals can be found working in nursing homes, hospitals, assisted living facilities, and home healthcare services. Duties may include transporting patients between rooms, helping patients with basic tasks like bathing and dressing , transferring patients from wheelchairs, measuring and recording vital signs, cleaning equipment, or serving meals. CNAs are usually required to complete a state-approved career training program. These programs last a few months but are completed in under a year. Certified nursing assistants must be registered to work in the state in which they practice. Requirements vary by state but usually include passing a competency exam. After receiving the proper education and meeting all licensing requirements, APRNs may be allowed to perform certain advanced primary and specialty healthcare services for patients. Nurse anesthetists, nurse midwives, and nurse practitioners are all examples of APRNs. Duties and responsibilities vary by specialization. They must also pass the proper licensing exams, which vary according to their specific area of specialty. APRNs must be licensed in the state in which they work and meet continuing education requirements.

Chapter 6 : Major Requirements | Nursing | Carthage College

Classes will focus on taking care of injured and sick patients (meaning physical care, but also emotional care), covering such topics as pharmacology and administering drugs, surgical nursing, obstetrics, nursing ethics, care of the elderly and kids, epidemiology, and leadership.

Nursing degree courses typically provide students with an extremely comprehensive education and include a diverse range of healthcare-related subjects. For example, nurses need an understanding of physiology and chemistry along with a variety of other science subjects to do their jobs effectively; courses in these subjects will be included their nursing major. Gerontology involves caring for the elderly and handling their health needs. Those who minor in gerontology will learn about the aging process and its psychological and sociological implications. Administration Nurses who aspire to run a healthcare facility may want to consider a minor in administration as this prepares them for roles in leadership. They will be taught to apply the principles in a variety of settings including in long term and acute care facilities. Nutrition Food and nutrition is extremely important when it comes to human health. Nurses who minor in nutrition will be taught a diverse variety of nutrition-related subjects including the economics of nutrition along with relevant history and public policy. Psychology Understanding the human mind and behavior can be tremendously useful in a range of careers, including nursing. A psychology minor can prepare a nurse to work with patients in treatment facilities for the mentally ill or to be more effective nurses to patients who have difficulty coping with illness. A minor in psychology may also make a nurse more hireable and allow them to advance further in their career. Global Health This program provides students with an understanding of issues that affect health around the world. A global health program covers topics such as global community health planning and infectious diseases. Students will also learn about international health work along with global disparities and inequalities in healthcare. Foreign Languages A foreign language can be extremely helpful for nurses as it allows them to communicate effectively with patients as they undergo medical care. Patients often feel more at ease when able to converse with someone in their native tongue. Additionally, being able to speak other languages opens up a range of career possibilities around the world. Spanish is the most popular option, but almost any foreign language will be useful in nursing. The right minor is important as it helps the nursing student to broaden their knowledge and has the potential to make them better nurses. Choosing a minor is one of the most important decisions a nursing student will make, therefore it should be done carefully.
