

Chapter 1 : Title: Masterpieces of the drama () by Alexander Ward Alliso

Applauded by reviewers for its generous number of selections, the sixth edition continues to offer true "masterpieces" of drama at a reasonable price. This text contains 31 plays ranging from Aeschylus to Churchill.

Masterpiece is best known for presenting adaptations of novels and biographies, but it also shows original television dramas. The theme music played during the opening credits is the Fanfare-Rondeau from Suite of Symphonies for brass, strings and timpani No. The theme was performed by Collegium Musicum de Paris. Roland Douatte was the conductor. It was recorded in by Vogue Records in Paris, France, and was later remastered in stereo and re-released by Nonesuch records in the s. During the first seasons in the s, the theme music accompanied varying closeup shots of a waving British flag, which panned out into a still image of a British flag on a staff serving as the P in "Masterpiece". In the late s, the opening video switched to views of antique books and other literary artifacts, many of which titles had been dramatized on the program. In , Masterpiece gained a sister series, Mystery! In , to commemorate the 30th anniversary of the show, it presented Masterpiece: In looking for an underwriter for the series, Calderwood eventually met with Herb Schmertz of Mobil Corporation. The working title for the series had been The Best of the BBC, which was changed to Masterpiece Theatre before the first broadcast, with Sarson insisting upon the British spelling for Theatre. From to , it was broadcast without a host. The original series producer was Sarson. He was succeeded in by Wilson. The Trust gives donors the opportunity to support their local PBS station and also "secure the future of superb British drama I also have to raise money. In , the word "Theatre" was dropped, and the show, officially known as Masterpiece, was split into three different sections. Masterpiece Classic was initially hosted by Gillian Anderson ; [12] the following year, Laura Linney took her place. All three versions received their own opening sequences and theme music with a common signature based upon the First Suite in D by Mouret [10] originally chosen by Sarson, who had heard it played at a Club Med resort in Sicily, because it sounded "British and heraldic". The countdown special was based on more than 20, survey responses posted to the Masterpiece and PBS affiliate websites, the top 12 series were:
