Both reach a maximum speed of 70 mph. Layout, Elements and Theming Volcano, whose theme is obvious from its name, consists of 2, feet of track wrapped around a manmade mountain and volcano. It features four inversions: Maverick, with a western theme, boasts 4, feet of track in a more or less out and back layout. It features two inversions in the form of a twisted horseshoe roll. Volcano operates with three trains containing four cars with riders seated two across in two rows for a total capacity of 16 riders. Maverick operates with six trains consisting of four cars seating two across in two rows for a total capacity of 12 riders. Both coasters operate with over the shoulder restraints. Maverick used to have hard restraints but these were switched to more comfortable soft restraints. In this category I would be tempted to give Volcano the edge for its unique theme, superior height feet as opposed to feet multiplicity of inversions and element of surprise more about that in the section on ride experience. In this category there is no clear winner. Photo by Bobbie Butterfield Ride Experience A ride on Volcano begins with a left turn out of the loading station into a tunnel and onto the first launch track. The train accelerates to 70 mph before making a degree turn behind the mountain and entering the second launch tunnel. Riders are blasted upward out of the volcano into a rollout during which the train is completely inverted. The rollout at that height was in fact the tallest inversion on any coaster until the record was broken by Gatekeeper in The remainder of the course consists of three heartline rolls high above the ground interspersed with more wide turns. An foot drop into the brake run brings the ride to a conclusion. Photo by Bobbie Butterfield A ride on Maverick begins with a dispatch onto the first launch track. The train takes off and upon reaching the top of the launch hill drops feet at a daunting degree angle, reaching a maximum speed of 57 mph. It then makes several turns “right, left, right” before traversing an airtime hill. Another turn leads into the twisted horseshoe roll. This is a wonderful element, nothing short of awesome. The twisted horseshoe is followed by a turn into a tunnel containing the second launch track. At any rate, the train is launched to 70 mph and after exiting the tunnel, ascends a hill, then negotiates an overbanked turn. This is followed by a further turn which leads into a canyon “a nice, scenic touch” with an S-curve. Before the train enters the canyon, plumes of water shoot up alongside the track. The remainder of the course consists of two additional overbanked turns and an airtime hill. It should be noted that a ride on Maverick is a bit on the rough side; the same is true of Volcano. If one were to judge by the theme and thrill elements Volcano would come out ahead but in terms of the overall ride experience Maverick prevails. Volcano is a blast, both literally and figuratively, whereas Maverick is off-the-wall wild. It has more zip than Volcano and the pacing is spot on. Have you ridden Volcano and Maverick and if so, how do you think they match up?

Diane Brewster as Samantha Crawford, a charming and flirtatious con woman with a beguiling fake southern accent who managed to dupe Bret and Bart out of large sums in different episodesâ€”but not without having a little romance with each brother first. Brewster originated the role of Crawford on Cheyenne before Maverick went on the air. Gordon, also a screenwriter, would later script some episodes of the series but none of those in which he appeared. Mohr originally played the role in season one as a vengeful but charismatic killer. However, in seasons four and five, Breck portrayed Holliday as more of a lovable rogue who was always getting Bart in trouble with his scams. Kathleen Crowley as Modesty Blaine, Melanie Blake, and Marla, leading ladies with repeated appearances in various seasons. Mona Freeman played Modesty Blaine twice while Crowley played the role once. Crowley played leading ladies in eight different episodes, a series record. Mike Road played gambler Pearly Gates twice during the final season. Some performers, such as Kathleen Crowley, Tol Avery, Gage Clarke, and Chubby Johnson, appeared seven or eight times over the course of the series in various roles. Joel Grey played Billy the Kid in an unusual episode that featured a bravura pistol-twirling exhibition by Garner. Starring Jack Kelly and Robert Colbert! Theme song[edit] The memorable theme song was penned by prolific composers David Buttolph music and Paul Francis Webster lyrics. For the closing credits, a full-length 30 second version was used. The closing theme song was entirely instrumental during season one. A vocal version with lyrics debuted partway through season two, being used intermittently in place of the instrumental version. The vocal theme finally saw regular use by the end of season two and for all seasons thereafter. The vocal theme, performed by an all-male chorus, described the lead character of Maverick "Who is the tall dark stranger there? Episode list[edit] For a complete list of every episode in the series with comments, see the list of Maverick episodes. Augustus Heinze who ultimately became a speculator in the New York financial district at 42 Broadway. Huggins recalls in his Archive of American Television interview that this Warners-owned property was selected by the studio to replace "Point Blank" as the first episode in order to cheat him out of creator residuals. It was his favorite episode. Bret and Bart would frequently announce, "As my Pappy used to say Troy Donahue plays the son of a long-time lover of Pappy in the episode, and Adam West portrays a villain. During the first two seasons, with Huggins at the helm, writers were instructed to write every script while visualizing Garner playing the part; two-Maverick scripts denoted the brothers as "Maverick 1" and "Maverick 2," with Garner choosing which role he would play due to his senior status on the series. Zimbalist and Long eventually did appear together as regular series leads in 77 Sunset Strip, however. Many episodes are humorous while others are deadly serious, and in addition to purely original scripts, producer Roy Huggins drew upon works by writers as disparate as Louis Lamour and Robert Louis Stevenson to give the series breadth and scope. The Maverick brothers never stopped traveling, and the show was as likely to be set on a riverboat or in New Orleans as in a western desert or frontier saloon. The series had finished at 6 in the Nielsen ratings in the season, then fell to 19 in and out of the top 30 during its last two seasons.

The Mavs are undefeated at home this season and winless on the road. The Jazz have won two straight games heading into the contest. They defeated the Pelicans on Saturday evening in New Orleans. Here is how to watch the Oct. Start Time Must Read: Watch online Enjoying the game online has a few different avenues this evening. Storyline to follow- Luka Doncic vs. Joe Ingles Luka Doncic will look to continue his fast start against a tough defensive Jazz team. They have a defensive anchor in the middle in Rudy Gobert, but their best perimeter defender is Joe Ingles. Ingles is an unheralded year-old Australian who had a mini-breakout season for the Jazz last year. Ingles is going to bring the defense this evening. Doncic is difficult to stop, though. DeAndre Jordan does a fantastic job running the pick-and-roll with Luka. Doncic also has 3-point shooting ability and a lethal floater. His vision and IQ make his transition game standout too. Joe Ingles might need some luck on Sunday. Final thoughts Fans should tune in and enjoy the Dallas Mavericks third home game of the fresh season on Sunday evening. The Jazz are a playoff hopeful in the West, so plenty is at stake. Both are massive men who want to control the paint. Jordan seems unstoppable in Mavs uniform and is going for his sixth straight double-double to open the year. The battle down low could be the deciding factor, so be sure to monitor the proceedings.
