Nevertheless, I take on this formidable task with giddy eagerness because it affords me the chance to dive back through some of most emotionally stirring movie music to come out of Hollywood over the last 20 years. Others that fall into this group, and hence immediately out of contention from this top ten list would be among others: While some of his scores can almost be indistinguishable from one another, often times, there are incomparable moments of wonder, exultation, and brilliance dotted throughout these very same scores. One may find that scores like this, which tend to trend earlier than later in his prolific career, dominating my top ten list. Again, Newman provides a dream-like, sonic landscape with piano, woodwinds and strings, supporting the apparently young and loving, suburbanite-couple perfectly. The end result is a score that, if experienced within the gut-wrenching film, can hardly be forgotten. Newman is clearly up to the challenge effectively adding even more layers and textures to his strongly ambient style. He crafts a memorable robot-love theme and treats us to a number of playful and innocent themes which are well contrasted by a handful of thrilling action sequences. If so, then The Horse Whisperer is for you. The title theme is oft used throughout the movie, sometimes reaching emotional peaks that Thomas Newman has become adept at scaling. That, and because the tracks containing his summit reaching music are so very brief. We have heard it so many times, attached to so many things, that it may have lost some of its potency or even become a bit of a parody. While the ingredients of the piece are common to much of his work in the mids: This score has always deserved a more complete release. The story affords Newman a natural opportunity to employ the use of glass and chimes to great affect. The other striking inclusion is that of the full choir in the title theme; showing up at the most elevated moments of the film. His liberal and bright use of brass, bells and other chromatic percussion on top of his familiar string lushness truly distinguishes this effort and places it firmly in the top position. Meet Joe Black was the second collaboration between Brest and composer Thomas Newman (after "Scent of a Woman") and the composer was clearly inspired to step out of his comfort area by the romantic nature of the story. Of course, when Newman steps out of his comfort area, it invites a different way of thinking, seeing as he's more comfortable.
