Email Last Updated Jul 24, Her husband, Las Vegas firefighter George Tiaffay, was convicted of hiring a homeless man to carry out the attack and was last month sentenced to life in prison without the possibility of parole. It was evident from the photos I saw -- and especially in the home video her family shared with us. But she was more than a gorgeous cocktail waitress at one of the coolest casinos in Las Vegas. She was a mom who lived a very normal life in a suburb of Las Vegas, called Summerlin. A place I know very well. I covered the crime and court beat for five years. But this story also offered us the chance to tell a story few people know about: Remembering Shauna Tiaffay The over 41 million visitors a year to Las Vegas usually spend their limited time on the 4. All the glitter, gambling and gluttony happens because of the nearly , workers like Shauna Tiaffay who make your Vegas visit amazing. George and Shauna Tiaffay with their daughter, Maddie Justice4Shauna But at the end of the day, she would take off her cocktail uniform and put on Juicy Couture sweats and be a mom, go grocery shopping and work out at her neighborhood gym. The suburb of Summerlin is just 10 miles from the neon lights of the casinos. She was the friend who would giggle when she tripped at work, laughing at herself. She was the considerate coworker who would bring in cupcakes for any occasion. I know people just like Shauna in Las Vegas. She is the definition of a typical Las Vegas resident who kept tourists happy and kept them coming back Family and friends honored the memory of Las Vegas cocktail waitress Shauna Tiaffay with a balloon launch on her birthday five months after her September murder. The high school homecoming king and star athlete from Newman, Calif. With his striking looks and kind deeds of civil service, he made friends easily. After meeting Shauna at the casino where they both worked, he became a firefighter. Friends and family recall how he doted their daughter, Maddie. His family insists that the person convicted of this murder is not the person they know. Covering this story since , I followed the criminal case through its numerous court proceedings, attended memorials and vigils for Shauna and finally covered every day of the trial. Everyone we worked with on this case -- from the detectives, to attorneys, friends and family members -- were passionate about their involvement. It was an incredible group to work with; regular folks, with regular jobs, who just happen to live in the shadow of this world famous destination.
