A Night in the Netherhells has ratings and 9 reviews. Gary said: The concluding book in the first of two trilogies dealing with Ebenezum and his appr.

They were followed by a sequel trilogy, The Wanderings of Wuntvor. Despite the name, the most important character in the series is not the titular mage, but his newly-taken apprentice, an eager, well-meaning, somewhat bumbly youth by the name of Wuntvor. While Ebenezum successfully banishes the demon back to the Netherhells, Guxx places a curse on Ebenezum that causes the wizard to burst into sneezing fits whenever he is exposed to magic — like when trying to cast a spell of his own. So, wizard and apprentice must set off to find a cure to this curse. Along the way, they encounter a wide cast of truly bizarre allies and acquaintances. Hubert, a dragon who wants to become a vaudeville star and Alea, a damsel offered to him in sacrifice who becomes his partner. Hendrek, the melancholic mercenary who wields the enchanted club Headbasher. Snarks, a demon who has been outcast from the Netherhells because he must always tell the truth. To their horror, though, they discover that Guxx has dragged the entire city down to the Netherhells as part of a plan to conquer the world. Wuntvor must venture forth and recover the city to see that his master is cured and the world is saved. This series contains examples of: Affably Evil - The Dealer of Death is polite, cheerful and willing to talk. However he clearly prefers Betty Norei. The Horn of Wonk creates such a horrific noise when blown that anyone except the user who is immune will do just about anything to avoid hearing it being blown again. Cannot Tell a Lie: Carry a Big Stick: Not only can Ebenezum not be around magic or cast a spell without sneezing, Snarks simply cannot tell a lie, and Headbasher causes whoever has possession of it to be eternally hounded by demons looking to collect on the rent owed for using it. Does This Remind You of Anything? The Dealer in Death favors throttling his victims, and used to practice by strangling wild pigs. In contrast, on the outer part of the city, a man quickly declared Wuntvor to be too weird for him when he heard the ferrets were "personally related" to Wuntvor. The Dealer in Death, upon their meeting "A Night in the Netherhells", is perfectly amiable towards Wuntvor and willing to help him succeed in his quest. Brax the Salesdemon and his Used Weapons business. The curse on Ebenezum, of course. Wuntvor turns the shreds of a magic hat that can create massive appearances of flowers, scarfs and live ferrets into a surprisingly useful tool on a number of occasions. Small Name, Big Ego: Damsel and Dragon think of themselves as budding stars of the vaudeville stage. So terrible, in fact, that Wuntvor discovers one damned soul in the Netherhells, a former famous dramatist, is now tortured by forcing him to watch their acts over and over again. Cuthbert, appearing in "A Night in the Netherhells". One appears in the Western Woods and develops an infatuation with Wuntvor, as it wants to lay its head in the lap of a virgin. Alea tries to offer her own services, but the unicorn keeps bluntly turning her down. When I Was Your Age In A Multitude of Monsters, a griffin complains that his son listens to Madrigals, when Gregorian Chants were good enough for him.
