Created by Francis Durbridge "By Timothy! But his main venue was radio -- the show was good for a whopping thirty-year run, originally on the BBC Light Programme and then sent out internationally with the result that Paul Temple, even now, has fans all over the world. Temple is a crime writer turned private eye, who is frequently "sent for" by Scotland Yard to help out. Aiding him in almost all of his investigations is his faithful journalist wife, Louise, known to one and all as "Steve," after her writing pen name of Steve Trent. Also frequently lending a hand is Sir Graham Forbes of Scotland Yard, who would join the couple at the end of each show to offer a post-mortem of sorts on the case at hand. The stories themselves were often quite suspenseful, and the radio serials were full of edge-of-your-seat endings, but nobody was ever going to mistake Temple for a member of the hard-boiled school. They were structured very much in the manner of a traditional mystery, up to and including the concluding gathering of the suspects, and were invariably set in the genteel world of the upper classes, even if Temple himself is closer to say, Sherlock Homes, than Miss Marple. According to 20th Century Crime and Mystery Writers: Durbridge has kept tight control over his creation over the years, being involved in almost all subsequent projects. A few of the books were even credited to "Paul Temple," actually a pseudonym of Durbridge and fellow writer Douglas Rutherford. There were four films in the forties, and in the fifties, a daily comic strip ran in the U. And in the late sixties, a television show made it on to the air, in colour even all the films had been in black and white. Also, instead of the much-loved serials of the radio show, the series featured standalone episodes for the most part. Even more disconcerting to older fans were that the series was set squarely in to the swinging 60s, often abroad, and many of the old characters, such as Sir Graham Forbes, were tossed, although new characters were added to the roster. Still, the show proved popular enough to run for four series. Not a bad run at all, if you ask me. Unfortunately, about a third of the original radio broadcasts have been lost over the years, mostly due to BBC cost-cutting measures "Hey, we can tape over these! You expected the interest will be limited to "Brits of certain age". Streets were empty on Monday I remember myself in my own Bat-Mitsva my 12th birthday sneaking out of the banquet hall with my transistor, not to miss the weekly program. Both the intro and ending were awesome, hair-raising stuff I never forgot it.

The relationship between Steve and Paul Temple seems to me quite like a couple of other very similar relationships, like Mr. and Mrs. North, Jeff and Haila Troy, and Jean and Pat Abbott, where hubby is masterful and wifey is a little ditzy.
