In this tutorial, you would be learning how to manipulate a poker card and use various filters to generate the flaming effect in Photoshop. Below is displayed what we are aiming to create. Card Image Download any card image from the internet and crop out the card using the lasso tool. Floral Background Next, we would need a floral background image. Bring the image on the canvas and crop out the pattern from the background. Background Once you have separated the floral pattern from the background, make a new layer and position it behind the pattern. Color the background dark green using the paint bucket tool. Poker Card Bring the Poker Card layer on the canvas. Match the card with the background. Then second click on the selection and choose the perspective option. Change the perspective of the card to add a little depth to the image. Liquify Once done with the perspective of the layer, go to Filter and choose the Liquify Option. Select the Turbulence Tool and apply it on the card to give it a melting look. Fire Image Now bring the fire image on the canvas. Press Control and right click on the card layer to automatically load the selection. This would copy paste the selection from the fire image. Blending Options Once the fire card layer has been made, select that layer and change the blending options from Normal to Hard Light. Keep the radius to 50px and move the layer behind the card. Backdrop on Fire Move the fire layer below the background layer and change the blending mode of the layer to Hard Light. Similarly select the backdrop layer and change the blending mode to Soft Light. Select the Turbulence Tool and apply it all over the pattern to give it a melting look. Once this filter is applied, make a new layer and color the borders black by using the brush tool. Go to the blending options of that layer and choose Overlay and you are done.

Most sections offer a menu of category options and corresponding subcategories. Using the Graphics panel The Graphics panel provides a single location from which you can apply artwork, theme decorations, and text styles to your images. In the Graphics panel, the following sections provide various items that can enhance your images. For example, you can select from varieties of frames, backgrounds, graphics, shapes, and text. Under each tab, a drop-down helps in choosing the right frames, backgrounds, graphics, shapes, or text to reproduce. Each section displays thumbnail examples of the artwork or effects that you can add or apply to an image. Add stylized shapes or graphics to an image When you add a shape or graphic to an image, the shape or graphic is a new layer and does not affect the original image. In the Graphics panel, choose from the category menu for example, By Event or By Activity , and choose a subcategory for example, Baby or Cooking. In the toolbox, choose a color for the shape. Do one of the following: Drag the thumbnail to the image. Use the Move tool to relocate or resize the shape or graphic. Add an artistic background to an image When you add an artistic background to an image, you replace the existing background layer. For example, you could use the selection tools to create a layer separating your family members from a kitchen background, and then replace the kitchen with a nature background. Name the layer and click OK. Select the Background layer in the Layers panel. In the Graphics panel, select Backgrounds from the drop-down. Add a frame or theme to an image When you add a frame or theme to a photo project, frames appear with a blank gray area for the image. Click and drag an image from the Photo Bin to the blank area. In the Graphics panel, choose Frames from the drop-down menu. Select a thumbnail and click Apply. Drag the thumbnail to the blank background. Drag the desired image from the Photo Bin to the frame. This Photoshop tutorial shows you how to perfectly cut out trees in seconds using channel based selections in Photoshop. Hey Cafe Crew, it is Colin Smith here from Photoshop Cafe and today, I am going to show you how to perfectly cut out a tree and in just a few seconds. So the best way to deal with this is to use Channel Based Selections. So if we click on the channels, you will see RGB. If you click on an individual channel, such as red, we will see that red, green and blue are the 3 different color channels that make up any image in RGB mode. Notice a big difference between the green and the blue. So here we go, we have got the blue copy which is now [Inaudible So all these blue now can be fully selected. Now, we are going to do the same over this side except we are going to do the opposite. Notice, as I pull this in, it darkens up those other areas. So what we are looking to do is just create a nice clean mask. We have got a clean mask, click OK. So now, all we need to do is hit Ctrl or Command on Mac and Click and now we are selecting inside the tree area, click on RGB, notice the red is there. Then we go back to our layers. All we have got to do now is hold down the Alt or the Option key and click on the Mask. That creates an inverted Mask. Now, when we see the Mask, look at this, our tree is nice and cut off, if you look over here, it is looking a little semi-transparent. We need to fix that. Okay, so what we need to do is just go to our Mask here and if we hit the Alt key and click or that would be Option key, we are now viewing the mask, we have selected the Mask and we are viewing it and we need to just kind of choke this a little bit. So we are going to hit Ctrl L, once again, take the black. And if we take the white, notice that we can plug up those areas and we are looking pretty good. I am just playing around in the midst a little bit there and in the blacks, notice, we have isolated a nice channel there and if we click back on our layer, we can see, we have got a nice cut out there. Now if you need to do any manual adjustments, what you will need to do is just select that Mask there and then you could just paint with black or white to add or take away from the mask. We will drag it underneath our layer and there we go, look at that, we are able to do this nice cut out of this tree, nice and easily. So I hope you guys enjoyed this. If you did, I have got a new tutorial every single week.
