Read more about the priority Port of Gladstone. Gladstone is the first priority port to have a master plan prepared and finalised. The master plan for the Port of Gladstone looks beyond the port boundary to ensure port-related development is sustainably managed while protecting the Great Barrier Reef. An independent environmental panel reviewed the master plan, advising it adequately considers the principles of ecologically sustainable development, the Reef Plan and the Independent Review of the Port of Gladstone. Master planned area The master planned area was determined through an evidence-based, comprehensive consultation process. The master planned area encompasses land-based and marine areas considered important for the efficient development and operation of the port. The inclusion of land and marine areas supports the management of potential impacts on the OUV of the GBRWHA and other environmental values that may occur as result of port development and operations. The priority Port of Gladstone master planned area encompasses a total area of about 73, hectares. This includes marine areas within the port limits and approximately: Precincts have been identified within the master planned area to identify the long-term objectives and intent for specific areas. The precinct approach supports cumulative impact management within the master planned area by identifying areas with environmental values where development should be limited, as well as separate areas that may be suitable for infrastructure. The master plan does not infer government approval of development and all proposals will still require full assessment in accordance with relevant statutory approval processes irrespective of the precinct it is in. These areas are excluded from the priority Port of Gladstone master planned area. Click for a larger version of the priority port of Gladstone map. How the master plan was developed A draft master plan for the priority Port of Gladstone was developed in consultation with Gladstone Ports Corporation, Gladstone Regional Council, state and federal agencies and other key stakeholders including industry and environmental groups. A robust evidence base was developed to support the preparation of the draft master plan. Evidence-based planning is a requirement of the Reef Plan. The draft master plan also supports the delivery of port-related actions of the Reef Plan. From 28 August to 9 October the draft master plan and supporting documentation for the priority Port of Gladstone were released for public consultation. Submissions received during the public consultation period informed the final master plan. The report on public consultation, outlines the matters raised in the submissions. For reference purposes the draft master plan and supporting master planning documentation remain available for viewing. Please note, these documents were compiled when Sustainable Ports Planning was part of the former Department of State Development. Copies of the master plan Display copies of the master plan are available at the following locations: Next steps in the master planning process The port overlay, the regulatory instrument that implements the master plan over the master planned area, will now be prepared.
