"Randy's Dandy Lions" is another classic book from the creative mind of Bill Peet about how Randy's lions always had stage fright but they realized that there are things far scarier than stage fright. "Randy's Dandy Lions" is a superb book about friendship that children will enjoy for many years.

A character has an ability that they cannot show off to or use in front of others because of nerves. Usually, once under pressure, the character is unable to perform at all, looking like a complete idiot as they stand there unable to do what others are asking them to do. The trope name is a more technical term for Stage Fright see Real Life examples below. If all we ever see is the character cracking under pressure, then it starts to edge into Informed Ability territory. Related to Dead Air , an occasional occurrence on radio. Akiyama Mio from K-On! Anpanman himself from Anpanman. Despite being a powerful superhero, he is horrible at onstage acting. He stutters, speaks his lines in a very forced tone, and blushes like mad. However, as soon as Baikinman attacks the stage, he forgets all of his fear and goes back to being the one thing he truly is: An episode of Cinderella Monogatari features an acrobat named Mary who is nervous about performing in front of the prince - she sees everyone as the prince. Charles decides to help out and helps Mary overcome her anxiety. Chopin from Classi9 has a terrible stage fright and fainted more than once while playing in public. Truth in Television as the real life Chopin gave around 30 public concerts and preferred private and cozy concerts in his home than big concerts. Sorata from The Pet Girl of Sakurasou suffers this in Episode 8 during his presentation for his video game idea. Subverted come Episode 10, where he performs just fine. Haruka Harano of Go! It takes being put in a Darkest Hour moment to overcome that fear. Itsuki from Yuki Yuna is a Hero is a good singer but her voice cracks when she sings around others. Episode 4 revolves around her trying to resolve the issue before a test in music class. Jean-Jacques Leroy suffers from a one-off attack of performance anxiety in Episode It ends up ruining his short program and his chance at victory in the Grand Prix Final. In Boruto Metal Lee is a very anxious kid who freaks out a lot. Fighting in front of others often causes him to stiffen up. Natsumi Murakami of Mahou Sensei Negima! Miko Iino from Kaguya-sama: Shirogane pretending to insult her values and putting her focus on him instead of the crowd lets her give her speech properly. Valt from Beyblade Burst has stage fright. A one-shot character on Yu-Gi-Oh! GX is a competent duelist who gets stage fright when dueling in front of others. He deals with this by creating the "Duel Giant", where his very large friend who has his own self-esteem issues disguises himself to look like a fierce giant and duels others while the smaller one relays instructions via hidden radio. One story in Archie Comics involved Reggie getting stage fright during his first attempt at stand-up comedy, leading to Jughead heckling him, which got Reggie mad enough to reply and then go into the rest of his routine. I never knew it was possible for someone to forget so much so quickly without a severe blow to the head. One of the superheroes in Mystery Men has the power to become invisible "but only when nobody is looking. When he learns he has to perform in front of an audience and on live television for his latest gig, well At first his aversion to public speaking is so strong that he refuses to join the society at all. Constantine, the villain in Muppets Most Wanted , surprisingly suffers from stage fright. When she tries to audition for the singing competition, she freezes up and totally blows it. In the finale, she finally overcomes it and literally brings down the house. Lets Play Outback Wawa: Literature Ron Weasley has this problem in Harry Potter books five and six. This is not because of an inherent inability to deal with nerves, but because of the enormous weight of pressure and responsibility that Ender had placed on her. This gets in the way of his desire to be a superhero until he gets access to some military surplus battleship armour and a scrap Volkswagen Beetle. In Lonely Werewolf Girl one of the biggest problems Dominil has acting as manager for werewolf punk-rockers Beauty and Delicious is preventing them getting completely drunk due to their stage fright. Yep, werewolves with stage fright. In Moving Pictures , clickie superstar Ginger is terrified to step out of the coach in front of a cheering crowd, having only acted in front of a camera crew rather than an audience. Similar, in Wyrd Sisters , Death gets a case of stage fright and starts fumbling over the lines "he" is supposed to play when he turns up for real on the stage towards the climax at the book. The more nervous I got, the more mistakes I made. This does not end well. In one Horatio

Hornblower story, Hornblower goes down in flames when he takes his examination for lieutenant before a board of three captains. They pose him a hypothetical shipboard disaster and he blanks out as they point out all the horrible things that would be happening in the real situation—and then the Spanish send a fire ship into the harbor. Hornblower helps steer it away from the fleet with one of the examiners, who makes a point of telling him afterward what a mercy it was because he was about to fail. He has a few drinks beforehand, but winds up getting so drunk he makes a total fool of himself. Cindy fails to so much as mutter a syllable the entire time - all she can do is stare blankly at the camera throughout the show - and Mike reassures his disconsolate, humiliated youngest daughter afterward, "It can happen to anyone. Alex is well prepared for the show and victory for his school is assured just by his mere presence Alex is unable to answer one question or spit out a coherent statement, while Mallory the underachiever is relaxed, despite only answering a few of the questions right. Game shows are a prime example of this trope. Many shows have qualifying tests, which producers use to select the contestants they believe will perform the best and have a chance to win. While many contestants selected to play the game do well, many others simply do not. As such, contestants sometimes unintentionally say the wrong thing when asked a question everybody knows the right answer to. Pat Sajak, host of Wheel of Fortune, has said many times - especially after an easy Bonus Round puzzle goes unsolved - that playing the game at home or from the studio audience is much different than a contestant playing the game, and that nerves and the pressure to do well take their toll when the cameras begin rolling. Played with in Married Marcy is anxious about having to deliver bad news at a presentation to her bank executives. She sees a psychotherapist who conditions her to associate public speaking with sex. This not only relieves her performance anxiety, but causes her to have an orgasm during the presentation. Hutch can pull off the most embarrassing undercover roles without a hitch or a stammer, but put him in front of an audience in his own identity and he freezes up. Willow in Buffy the Vampire Slayer. Singing in front of people is identified as one of her worst fears in "Nightmares", a first season episode. In Zoey, Michael gets a bad case on Open Mic Night, to the point of vomiting on the first row of spectators, including the girl he has a crush on. How bad is it? She accidentally destroys an entire TV studio while trying to get away when Austin gets her on a live TV show. Despite spending all his free time inside of a book even when commanding a quarantined supply ship Hornblower, as in the original story, can barely give his name correctly. All interrupted by the fire ship, of course. Hornblower ends that particular episode still as an acting-lieutenant, but the official promotion comes down in the next. He gets so nervous that he locks himself in the bathroom before his scene, and the rest of the cast are forced to improvise to extend the play. Thankfully does Duk Hwa have the courage to rap until Hyng Suk feels confident enough to sing, and the concert became a success. Irya from Bits Fair is a constant victim to stage fright, first seen at the start of chapter one. Rougina of Alice and the Nightmare, while with a lot of practice, still dislikes public speaking and the stress of it makes her tremble and in need of several minutes of exhausted panting afterwards. Are you trying to kill us?! It happens a lot more often in live commentary, because the LP-er has to focus on two things at once. At first, he has Eddie lip-sync to him, but then feels guilty over pushing Eddie into the spotlight this way and runs off. Eddie finally fakes a sore throat, forcing Gregory to step in as his understudy and overcome his stage fright. Does not get better when Rarity tells her there might be thousands of ponies watching. In "Hurricane Fluttershy," Fluttershy has to help out in whipping up a tornado with the other pegasai, but is overcome by fear of her own perceived inadequate flight capabilities. This has a cause; as a filly, she was bullied for being a weak flier. By the end of the episode, however, Fluttershy manages to overcome her inferiority complex, and in Season 4 proves capable of flight performance in a very public setting twice. In "Filli Vanilli", Fluttershy is afraid of singing publicly, and as a result hides behind a curtain while another pony lip syncs to her voice. To her credit, she had a deep bass singing voice at the time. When she accidentally knocks the curtain down and outs herself as the real singer, she has a nervous breakdown. For this specific problem, she ultimately is able to try again, but decides to work through it slowly. Happens with Rainbow Dash in "Sonic Rainboom" after she crashed during every practice session and was being upstaged by Rarity. Sweetie Belle has an instance of this in "The Show Stoppers. She appears to have gotten past it as of "For Whom the Sweetie Bell Toils," when she writes, directs, and acts in a play, but she has yet to publicly sing. This was the original reason why SpongeBob from Spongebob

Squarepants kept failing to get his boating licence. The first couple episodes it was shown, it was stress that made Spongebob freak out and crash into everything. Then Flanderization and Seasonal Rot hit, and the reason was completely forgotten, and that Spongebob would just inexplicably turn into a crazy, senseless Person of Mass Destruction behind a wheel, no matter the situation. Another episode has SpongeBob suddenly develop a fear of public speaking when he has to give an oral report in boating school. Navy, one of the Homeworld Rubies, becomes flustered and runs away when brought up to talk to an audience, as seen in "Back To The Moon". If I remember correctly, we were on Earth

"Randy's Dandy Lions" is no exception. It deals with the concept of respect for other creatures and other people - themes that are common in Peet's books. One of his best in that aspect is his book "Zeek, Zack, and Zodiac." Like many of his books, "Randy's Dandy Lions" is written in rhyming verse (so is Z, Z, and Z) and it is fun to read.
