What about the Princess and the Pea? As summer heats up and children want to stay up later, reading fables could be a great addition to their bedtime routine. Read Math Fables for lessons that apply every day Math Fables by Greg Tang is one of his many books that incorporate math, and this one is appropriate for children in kindergarten and first grade. The book is full of different fables, each with its own moral. But they all take place in the real world, showing your child that math is present everywhere and every day. And, while their attention is caught, your child will be learning about counting and grouping numbers. Although it starts small with the number two, the stories build up to more complicated groupings that help prepare children for place value concepts. The stories are especially good at showing that a number is not just an amount; it is also composed of other smaller numbers. You can read the stories a little at a time, splitting them up over a whole week before bedtime. Or you could read the whole book and use it as a jumping off point for some fun math activities. Use the activities from the back of the book or invent your own. Try going for a walk outside, and have your child count whatever they find, from birds to squirrels to people walking dogs. And if your child gets really interested in one particular animal or plant, try creating a story around it. The next step after reading Math Fables Did you and your child love Math Fables and wish it was longer? Or maybe you want something a bit more advanced? Grapes of Math is for slightly older children, from second to third grade. This story has quick puzzles on each page with witty rhymes to help your child learn about different groupings to get quicker answers when adding or subtracting. This helps develop problem-solving skills instead of stressing memorization. And there are plenty of activities you can explore after reading. You can try out different methods of counting the objects on each page – count each one separately, or find different groupings from the one that is suggested in the book. This emphasizes the way that grouping by an easily multiplied number is a more efficient way of counting. You can also get creative and create new puzzles and hints for each other!

Short Stories About Imagination Dreams These stories will have characters with rich inner lives or those with imaginations that tend to get out of control. Some stories take place in a dream or have a dream-like quality. See also Fear The Wish Roald Dahl A young boy tries to make his way across a carpet, imagining it to be full of hot coals and snakes. Read here The Secret Life of Walter Mitty James Thurber A mild and ineffectual man has a series of daydreams while accompanying his wife on her weekly errands. Read here Sredni Vashtar Saki A ten-year-old boy, Condradin, seeks refuge from his cousin and guardian by playing in a tool shed. He has two pets there, a hen and a ferret. He imagines the ferret is a god. The man tells old stories, and the narrator imagines things in her sleep deprived state. Not knowing the contents of the boxes, his imagination runs wild and torments him. After having a look around, the narrator goes on a dreamlike walk. He finds a mummified foot – the foot of the daughter of a Pharaoh. Read here A Way Out of the Forest Maara Haas Rouga and Arnie, young siblings living in poverty without much adult involvement, make a game out of their situation by pretending they live in a tent in the cold and are waiting for provisions. He reacts strongly to several parts of the film. He dreams of his personal and professional history, including all the stepping stones in his path to success. A Dream of Armageddon H. Wells On a train, a man starts a conversation with the narrator about dreams. He says that he has recurring, vivid dreams that are killing him. He dreams he is a different man living in another place, and he always dies in the dreams. Read here Maud Martha and New York Gwendolyn Brooks Maud daydreams about New York – all the expensive things to buy, the tasteful homes, the fancy food, and the arts and entertainment scene. The men poke some fun at his profession of coffin making. He gets angry and it affects his sleep. She becomes obsessed with transferring the hospital records to her own bible of dreams, with Johnny Panic as the god. One day the director catches her with the official records. Henry Murray is in a cell on death row. The time for his execution is almost here. He talks to his friend Bonifacio in a nearby cell. He is also visited by a reverend. An editor fills in some information at the end. There is no clear favorite. Sir Lulworth adds to the confusion with an insider tip. When Lola says she dreamt of the race, everyone is attentive. The manager warns them to be appropriately dressed next time. Lovecraft The narrator has a surreal walk in his garden. The moonlight seems to be affecting his perception. Flowers that blow into the nearby stream look like dead faces. Robin comes across a coat, still warm inside, on a bench. He sees a thin, older man in the distance, walking off in the cold. Robin knows something is wrong. He changes his mission. He gets a call from Sally, the widow of his recently deceased friend, Victor. In the morning, McGrath goes to the doctor about his side. She suggests that the recent deaths of several friends is affecting his mind.

By Suzanne Marshall on August 5, in Bedtime Stories Here is a carefully selected collection of goodnight poems for children. Take your crown from your shining head. Now put on your gray nightcap, And shut your eyes for a good long nap. Goodnight, Sky, bright and blue! Not a wink of sleep for you. You must watch us all the night, With your twinkling eyes so bright. Now close up Every swinging bell and cup. Take your sleeping-draught of dew: Pleasant dreams to all of you! Goodnight, birds, that sweetly sing! Every leaf upon the tree Soft shall sing your lullaby. Last to you, little child, Sleep is coming soft and mild. Now sleep shuts your blue eyes bright: Little child dear, goodnight! Come to my blankets and come to my bed, Come to my legs and my arms and my head, Over me, under me, into me creep. Sleep, Sleep, come to me, Sleep. Blow on my face like a soft breath of air, Lay your cool hand on my forehead and hair, Carry me down through the dream-waters deep. Tell me the secrets that you alone know, Show me the wonders none other can show, Open the box where your treasures you keep. Softly I call you; as soft and as slow. Come to me, cuddle me, stay with me so, Stay till the dawn is beginning to peep. Then quickly does he throw it, His golden sleepy-sand, And all, before they know it, Are off for sleepy-land! Goodnight Poem by E. Nesbit Sleep, sleep, my treasure,.

To laugh To love The room was so quiet you could hear a pin drop. The things we overlook as simple and ordinary and that we take for granted are truly wondrous. A gentle reminder - that the most precious things in life cannot be built by hand or bought by man. What would you do? Draw out every pound, of course! Well, everyone has such a bank. Its name is Time. Every morning, it credits you with 86, seconds. Every night it writes off, as lost, whatever of this you have failed to invest to good purpose. It carries over no balance. It allows no overdraft. Each day it opens a new account for you. Each night it burns the records of the day. There is no going back. There is no drawing against the "tomorrow". Therefore, there is never not enough time or too much time. Time management is decided by us alone and nobody else. It is never the case of us not having enough time to do things, but the case of whether we want to do it. Love stays A nurse took the tired, anxious serviceman to the bedside. Heavily sedated because of the pain of his heart attack, he dimly saw the young uniformed marine standing outside the oxygen tent. He reached out his hand. The nurse brought a chair so that the marine could sit beside the bed. Occasionally, the nurse suggested that the Marine move away and rest awhile. Whenever the nurse came into the ward, the marine was oblivious of her and of the night noises of the hospital - the clanking of the oxygen tank, the laughter of the night staff members exchanging greetings, the cries and moans of the other patients. Now and then she heard him say a few gentle words. The dying man said nothing, only held tightly to his son all through the night. Along towards dawn, the old man died. The marine released the now lifeless hand he had been holding and went to tell the nurse. While she did what she had to do, he waited. She started to offer words of sympathy, but the Marine interrupted her. The nurse was startled, "He was your father," she answered. When I realised that he was too sick to tell whether or not I was his son, knowing how much he needed me, I stayed. The black dot One day, a professor entered his classroom and asked his students to prepare for a surprise test. They all waited anxiously at their desks for the exam to begin. The professor handed out the exams with the text facing down, as usual. Once he handed them all out, he asked the students to turn over the papers. At the end of the class, the professor took all the exams, and started reading each one of them out loud in front of all the students. All of them, with no exception, defined the black dot, trying to explain its position in the center of the sheet. After all had been read, the classroom silent, the professor started to explain: No one wrote about the white part of the paper. Everyone focused on the black dot - and the same thing happens in our lives. However, we insist on focusing only on the black dot - the health issues that bother us, the lack of money, the complicated relationship with a family member, the disappointment with a friend. The dark spots are very small when compared to everything we have in our lives, but they are the ones that pollute our minds. Take your the eyes away from the black dots in your lives. Enjoy each one of your blessings, each moment that life gives you. Be happy and live a life filled with love! It is a very deep hole. It takes forever to find a way out. It still takes a long time to get out. I see it is there. I still fall in I know where I am. It is my fault. I get out immediately. I walk down the same street. I walk around it. I walk down another street. Portia Nelson Changing our vision There was a very wealthy man who was bothered by severe eye pain. He consulted many physicians and was being treated by several. He did not stop consulting a galaxy of medical experts; he consumed heavy loads of drugs and underwent hundreds of injections. But the ache persisted with more vigour than before. At last, a monk who was supposed to be an expert in treating such patients was called for by the suffering man. The monk understood his problem and said that for sometime he should concentrate only on green colours and not to let his eyes fall on any other colours. It was a strange prescription, but he was desperate and decided to try it. The millionaire got together a group of painters and purchased barrels of green paint and directed that every object his eye was likely to fall to be painted green just as the monk had directed. Hearing this, the monk laughed and said "If only you had purchased a pair of green spectacles, worth just a few dollars, you could have saved these walls and trees and pots and all other articles and also could have saved a large share of his fortune. You cannot paint the world green. It is foolish to shape the world, let us shape ourselves first. The two pebbles Many years ago in a small Italian town, a merchant had the misfortune of owing a large sum of money to the moneylender. Both the merchant and his daughter were horrified by the proposal. The moneylender told them that he would put a black pebble and a white pebble into an empty bag. The girl would then have to pick one pebble from the bag. But, if she refused to pick a pebble, her father would be thrown into jail. As they talked, the moneylender bent over to pick up two pebbles. As he picked them up, the sharp-eyed girl noticed that he had picked up two black pebbles and put them into the bag. He then asked the girl to pick her pebble from the bag. The girl put her hand into the bag and drew out a pebble. Without looking at it, she fumbled and let it fall onto the pebble-strewn path where it immediately became lost among all the other pebbles. His father takes him into the forrest He is required to sit on a stump the whole night He is all by himself. He cannot cry out for help to anyone. Once he survives the night He cannot tell the other boys of this experience. Each boy must come into his own manhood. The boy was terrified Beasts were all around him. Maybe even some human would hurt him. The wind blew the grass and earth But he sat stoically It would be the only way he could be a man. Finally, after a horrific night It was then that he saw his father We are never truly alone. Even when we do not know it, our family and friends are watching out for us What love is all about It was a busy morning, approximately 8: He stated that he was in a hurry and that he had an appointment at 9: I took his vital signs, and had him take a seat, knowing it would be over an hour before someone would be able to see him. I saw him looking at his watch and decided, since I was not busy with another patient, I would evaluate his wound.
