the pants are quite old and worn. They are probably my favourite summer crops, and I have had them in my wardrobe since or I'm wearing them in the 'Keith Moon' photographs in 'Yokes' ().

At first, no one is interested, but as time goes by, Julie gets more and more followers of her blog. Nominated for an Oscar. The great Yorkshire actor Charles Laughton is superb as Hobson. Rated R for some sexuality and brief violence. An amusing vigilante story. A beautiful film documenting a little know relationship. We also see how Keats died almost a pauper and yet went on to become probably the best loved and celebrated of English Poets, up there with Byron and Wordsworth. Tolstoy is wonderfully presented as a man who is aware he cannot live up to his own ideals. It shows how his image and words are corrupted into the ideals and beliefs of others who have lost their way. The acting, cinematography, costumes, are superb. It is a film about love. The portray and comparisons of old love and new love. Love of a man and love of an ideology. It is a very funny and moving film. Nominated for 2 Oscars. December 23 at 2pm. Fox goes from common chicken thief to journalist. This is actually funnier than you may think. It is a blend of sophistication with old school story telling. Local farmers are tired of their chicken houses being raided Fox goes into survival mode and must outwit the chicken farmers and doing so saves a whole community. Fox is fantastic and a hero. Besides Clooney, an all-star cast lends voice to these interesting characters: There, he meets Lyn Cassidy Clooney who is a "psychic" soldier for the US government, trained by his hippie instructor Billy Bridges to use his mind, peace and love to overcome hairy military situations. The five owners of motor cars in the parish of Laxdale hold a tax revolt to protest the absence of a proper road into a remote village on the Wet Coast of Scotland near Skye. A parliamentary delegation is sent from London to restore order! All acting performances are wonderful, with early appearances by character actors who went on to become household names. Prunella Scales as a very young schoolteacher; Rikki Fulton as a Glasgow poacher. And the general, oh the cheneral! My favourite line is from a bit player, spoken at a public meeting. No view of the Cuillins and no river? Man, I would rather live in Hell than in a place like that! On my last visit I arrived in the village by one good road and left by another. He happens to have re-married, to a younger woman, while she becomes involved with her architect Steve Martin. Will Meryl and Alec get back together again, or will she set off into the sunset with Steve. Nominated for 3 Golden Globes. Having a conductor face insurmountable odds in turning around a makeshift, rag-tag 55 piece orchestra into one befitting of the name "Bolshoi", building up to a crescendo of a finale that just begs for an encore. We follow the story of Andrei Filipov Aleksei Guskov , a one time hotshot conductor of the Bolshoi orchestra who was cut down to size, and now works as the janitor in the halls of his glorious past. He chances upon an opportunity from Paris which had invited the Bolshoi, but hence decides to hijack this opportunity, and to bring his own team of musicians on a trip that they would never forget. Great to see something a bit different and original arrive at the cinema. With a quality plot and an admirable cast to carry it, this film portrays a seemingly realistic behind the scenes view of modern politics. With so many discreet messages hidden in the dialogue and screenplay it would undoubtedly be worth watching twice. Commendable performances from all but in particular from lead Ewan McGregor who manages to carry subtle meanings from the script to the camera very well. Cleverly placed sarcastic comedy breaks up the seriousness nicely without upsetting the sinister and mysterious feel of the film. Typical Polanski style, the film will leave you debating the ending and analysing its message. Like Belleville Rendezvous before it, this film features a slightly downbeat but amusing narrative and likable characters. The world they live in is by turns grotesque and beautiful. Like the earlier film, there is virtually no dialogue either, usually just half-heard snapshots of words. The story instead is told via the actions of the characters. Perhaps unsurprisingly the narrative is very simple. But the beauty of this film is not in the storyline but in the details. The Illusionist is another triumph for this wonderful French animator. The film is set for the most part in Scotland. There has always been an enigmatic element of the sublime to this artists work, and the Scottish setting fits him like a glove. But the film is more than an aesthetically beautiful exercise, as there are a number of memorable characters and a definite emotional core. This viewer had a lump in his throat at the end, although admittedly the story pleasing does finish on a happy and hopeful note. In summary, The Illusionist is a beautiful and melancholic film about the coming-of-age of a young girl and the end-of-an-era for a type of entertainer. Rated R for strong violence and language throughout, drug use and sexual content. Michael Caine is excellent, this is probably one of his best films and I expect film nominations for his role. The film gives a gritty but realistic view of the life most people live on the sink estates of Britain, all are there through no choice of their own, but some are aware of the conditions they are forced to live in. Overall, a very well put together film which will make the hairs on the back of your neck stand up at times..

Chapter 2 : 3 Ways to Restore Old Photographs - wikiHow

I finished Strathendrick Thursday evening. Here is a less artistically lit photo: The Strathendrick pattern is part of Kate Davies West Highland Way club and is worked in her own Milarrochy Tweed yarn. It is a very oversized sweater worked on mm needles, so this was a whole heckuva lot of.

This week, the West Highland Way Club passes through Strathendrick and Strathblane, close to where I live. I walk through these beautiful valleys (or straths) every single day, enjoying the changing seasons and my surroundings. It is a landscape of great variety: the bare muir blooms with colourful.
