Tall, Dark and Deadly Margaret L. Carter When horror actor Claude Darvell agrees to produce and star in novelist Eloise Kern's vampire movie script, they feel a powerful attraction upon their first meeting.

A by-invitation group blog for busy authors of SFR, Futuristic, or Paranormal romances in which at least one protagonist is an alien, or of alien ancestry. Excerpt from "Tall, Dark, and Deadly": Eloise retreated into the adjacent sitting room. After opening the curtains halfway to let in some light, she saw a matching couch and chair, a bookcase, a miniature refrigerator and a wet bar with a compact-model microwave oven on its counter. She sat on the couch and waited, glad for the few minutes of solitude to tame the hive of bees in her skull and the spiders skittering in her stomach. Soon Claude emerged from the bedroom, barefoot, in a pair of blue satin jogging shorts and a T-shirt. He went to the bar, filled a glass with ice and got out bottles of gin and tonic. Not right this minute anyway. He caught you off guard, so he hypnotized you. You startled me out of a sound sleep, after all. Suspended animation looks a lot like death. Her numbed brain woke up and processed clues from the past few days. Her throat tightened with indignation. You made up all that rigmarole about producing my script just to feed on me. I can get that from the vampire groupies. She edged as far away as the space allowed. He would realize instantly that I care for you. You turned me into a puppet, like one of those blow-up sex dolls, and wiped my memory on top of it. She jerked away from his touch. Now will you listen? What do you mean, you vowed not to do it again? Here today, gone tomorrow. No wonder you think you can treat us like puppets. I take no more than they can spare, and I reward them with pleasure. Pleasure that I thoroughly enjoy sharing. I told you, I prefer the quiet life. Probably sunscreen as well. He was fortunate enough to grow up in the enlightened atmosphere of Victorian England. I was born in a French village in , when rural folk still seriously believed demons might walk among them. It was also the height of the vampire-hunting craze in Greece and Eastern Europe, as you know. I became infected with the superstitions of the culture around me. Does that happen a lot? We have to be to fit invisibly into your world. We tend to pick up human attitudes unless our mentors are very careful. Who was the woman, and why does he blame you for her death?

Tall, Dark And Deadly By Margaret L. Carter - FictionDB. Cover art, synopsis, sequels, reviews, awards, publishing history, genres, and time period.

In setting up the first three storylines and since good things come in threes, I decided to start with a trilogy , I took what I knew from my research and reading about Navy SEALs. First, SEALs work in very small teams of seven or eight men. Much of their work is covert. In fact, they use stealth, slipping into a location unnoticed. Working together, SEALs bond tightly with their teammates. They trust each other with their lives â€” they have to! They rely on each other to be better as a team of seven men than they could ever be as seven individuals. Most SEALs are alpha males. They are take charge types who prefer to take action. So I took that basic information and applied my number one rule of creating romantic heroes. I believe that in order to create truly wonderful, compelling romantic heroes, I have to set up a situation in which that character will really suffer. Being forced to be passive. To act as a target or bait. Separate the SEAL from his team. Blue is completely on his own. Injure the SEAL and make it impossible for him to remain on active duty. After a terrible knee injury, he can barely even walk, let alone do the physical kinds of activities a SEAL needs to be able to do. So there they were. My first three story ideas for this miniseries. Harvard was African American, and although there had only been one other IM with characters of color!!!!!! With her help, we made sure the art department delivered a cover with a picture of a very tall, very handsome, very black man with a shaved head. He plays an important part in both TAB and I: Oh, yes, I had plans for themâ€¦ Copyright Suzanne Brockmann.
