This gem of a theater, with its clubby wood panelled atmosphere, seems made to order for a Victorian drama with its title character in elegant hoop-skirted dresses, the men in stylish cravats. Director Ludovica Villar-Hauser has taken full advantage of the larger stage. The production now has the grander, more full-bodied aura it deserves. The story is bookended between the voice-over prologue and epilogue the latter nicely filling in what happens to Effie Ruskin, the Countess of the title while ending the story exactly when it should. Larger and grander, as this Countess may be, it nevertheless retains its warmth and intimacy. James Riordan, as Ruskin, far from growing complacent, seem to have used the long run at the Beckett to fully mine every Freudian nuance of his role. The same is true of his colleagues. While melodrama and rose-tinged romance swathe this Victorian tale in conventions of the era, it remains a thoroughly modern production.
