

Chapter 1 : The Crimson Capsule by Stanton A Coblentz

_The Crimson Capsule_ () contains a mixture of these two elements, but it may be best read as a straight adventure novel; the satiric aspects are fairly routine and do not take center stage. The heroes are two chums who fall in love with the same girl.

He was followed by three younger siblings: His first jobs were delivering newspapers for the Indianapolis Star in the morning and the Bedford Times in the evening. Grissom also picked fruit in area orchards and worked at a local meat market, a service station, and a clothing store in Mitchell. Grissom attended local public schools and graduated from Mitchell High School in . Although he excelled at mathematics, Grissom was an average high school student in other subjects. As a member of his boy scout troop, Grissom carried the American flag at the opening ceremonies of high school basketball games, while Moore played the drum in the high school band. Scott, born on May 15, , and Mark, born on December 30, . The family also enjoyed water sports and skiing. Grissom enlisted as an aviation cadet in the U. Army Air Forces during his senior year in high school, and completed an entrance exam in November . Grissom was inducted into the U. Grissom was determined to make his career in aviation and attend college. Bill for partial payment of his school tuition, Grissom enrolled at Purdue University in September . Betty Grissom joined her husband on campus during his second semester, and the couple settled into a small, one-bedroom apartment. Grissom continued his studies at Purdue, worked part-time as a cook at a local restaurant, and took summer classes in order to finish college early, while his wife work the night shift as a long-distance operator for the Indiana Bell Telephone Company to help pay for his schooling and their living expenses. Grissom graduated from Purdue with a Bachelor of Science degree in mechanical engineering in February . Upon completion of the program, he was assigned to Williams Air Force Base in Mesa, Arizona , where his wife, Betty, and infant son, Scott, joined him, but the family remained there only briefly. In March Grissom received his pilot wings and a commission as a second lieutenant. On March 11, , Grissom was promoted to first lieutenant and was cited for his "superlative airmanship" for his actions on March 23, , when he flew cover for a photo reconnaissance mission. Grissom soon learned that flight instructors faced their own set of on-the-job risks. During a training exercise with a cadet, the trainee pilot caused a flap to break off their two-seat trainer, sending it into a roll. Grissom quickly climbed from the rear seat of the small aircraft to take over the controls and safely land it. Grissom served as a test pilot assigned to the fighter branch. In Grissom received an official teletype message instructing him to report to an address in Washington, D. The message was classified "Top Secret" and Grissom was ordered not to discuss its contents with anyone. Of the military candidates who were considered, he was one of test pilots whose credentials had earned them an invitation to learn more about the U. Grissom was intrigued by the program, but knew that competition for the final spots would be fierce. He was nearly disqualified when doctors discovered that he suffered from hay fever , but was permitted to continue after he argued that his allergies would not be a problem due to the absence of ragweed pollen in space. Grissom and the six other men, after taking a leave of absence from their respective branches of the military service, reported to the Special Task Group at Langley Air Force Base in Virginia on April 27, , to begin their astronaut training.
