

Chapter 1 : Bush family - Wikipedia

The Dreidel Genealogy and Family Tree Page Welcome to the Dreidel Family page at Surname Finder, a service of Genealogy Today. Our editors have compiled this checklist of genealogical resources, combining links to commercial databases along with user-contributed information and web sites for the Dreidel surname.

These books are not just for children whose families celebrate Hanukkah. Grab the book and just read! All our book lists include affiliate links. Hanukkah Cookies with Sprinkles by David A. Alder is a phenomenal book that children of all backgrounds should read. The story is about Sara, a little girl who notices a man eating the rotten fruit left out by a grocer, and Morris, an old man. Sara starts leaving Morris cookies that she saves from her school snack. Then, as Hanukkah is coming, she leaves him a menorah, latkes, and more. The real kindness comes when he joins her family for Hanukkah in their home. This is a wonderful story of charity and friendship. Daddy Christmas and Hanukkah Mama by Selina Alko is a good book for families that celebrate both Hanukkah and Christmas, or really any two religious traditions, to see how one family found a way to honor both faith traditions. This is a good story, but I was hoping to get more info about Hanukkah than was provided. If you are looking to learn more about Hanukkah the next book is better, but as a story of a modern family, this is a great pick. I Have A Little Dreidel by Maxie Baum is a fun book that touches on some of the most common aspects of Hanukkah with text adapted from the popular dreidel song. The text is so much fun to read especially if you are familiar with the song. Trust me, it will be so much more fun with the right tune! It explains the history behind the holiday in an easy to understand format. This is a great book! Latkes, Latkes, Good to Eat: A Chanukah Story by Naomi Howland is a Hanukkah story about kindness repaid and how things can go awry. Sadie is a kind young woman. After she offers her firewood to an older woman who is cold, the older woman repays her with a magic frying pan. This pan magically makes latkes "as many as you want" if you say the magic words. Mayhem ensues, but the family and village find a way to make the mountains of latkes into a celebration. You will be craving latkes after reading this! Luckily, there is a recipe. An Original Story of Chelm by Jon Koons is a delightful story about the village of Chelm, known by some as the village of fools. They send a villager out to find out how to celebrate, only he misses the nearby village and ends up in the big city where there are Christmas trees. Luckily, the Rabbi returns and gets the village back on course, explaining the proper Hanukkah traditions and the reasons behind them all. I love this book. Hanukkah Lights by Ben Lakner is a book that is fun for a variety of ages and explains so much. This book clears up those fuzzies! There is so much in this board book. Little kids will love lifting the flaps to reveal fun details. Hanukkah Lights by David Martin is a new book to us and perfect for my toddler. Even though we do not celebrate Hanukkah, I want my kids to be familiar with various religions and celebrations. This is a perfect first Hanukkah book. My daughter loved it and it was fun to read with my son and have him read unfamiliar words. The Only One Club by Jane Naliboff is a cute book about a little girl named Jennifer who is the only one in her class who celebrates Hanukkah. I like the message this book delivers. The Eighth Menorah by Lauren L. Wohl is a sweet story about Sammy and the menorah he makes in Sunday School. The story is about Hanukkah, the special relationship grandparents have with their grandchildren, and how special kid-made art really is. Hanukkah Haiku by Harriet Ziefert is a bright and cheery look at the traditions surrounding the holiday within the parameters of a haiku on every page. Spending ages just looking at all of it is easy. Each page is a haiku that goes along with a night of Hanukkah. It also explains briefly some of the other traditions like playing dreidel, eating latkes, and chocolate gold coins! Share it with a friend! Become an Email Subscriber Enter your email address Sign up above and receive all new No Time for Flashcards posts directly in your email inbox. You may also like these posts.

Chapter 2 : The Dreidel Genealogy and Family Tree Page

Historical records and family trees related to Sophia Dreidel. Records may include photos, original documents, family history, relatives, specific dates, locations and full names.

Any family can choose to celebrate whichever holiday traditions they wish. Holiday joy can be doubled, rather than halved, when you choose to light the menorah and decorate the Christmas tree to honor the cultural and religious traditions of both parents. In our family, we have Orthodox Jews on one side of the family tree and born-again Christians on the other side. But my husband and I both share the same beliefs about diversity, tolerance, and spirituality. As a woman who was raised Catholic and has been happily married to a Jewish man for the past 13 years, I can attest that once you become a parent in an interfaith family, you quickly become accustomed to not being able to please everyone. But since the wisdom of your hearts brought you and your partner together in the first place, why not call on that same source of wisdom to guide you through creating your own version of happy holidays? Here are a few tips based on what our family has learned from holding the middle ground over the years: Talk to each other first and last The bottom line on family celebrations, holiday or otherwise, is to always do whatever you and your spouse deem best for your family. The only way to come to an understanding about what this means is to discuss it with each other first and last. Be prepared for this to be an ongoing conversation, and probably one that you revisit each year. Protect your joint point of view Never let bossy or opinionated family members horn in on conversations that rightly belong between you and your partner. Your kids come next, and the grandparents after them. This behavior will only create conflicts between you and your spouse. Ignore disapproving outsiders Never apologize for being an interfaith family, even if people in your extended family or circle of close friends do not approve of your union. Creating harmonious and joyful dual holidays in your own home is your parental right and your familial duty, even if it means agreeing to disagree with certain members of your extended family. The nice thing about Hanukkah is that it lasts for eight nights. Light the menorah candles and say the Hanukkah prayer every night, if you possibly can. You may be amazed at how moving and inspiring such simple rituals can be, even on busy school nights. Look for the quieter, more awe-inspiring moments in Christmas as well, such as ending the day admiring the beauty of the decorated tree and window lights. Keep both sets of traditions At our house, we celebrate as much of both traditions as we can, without a worry about whether the holidays overlap or not. For me, this means the Christmas tree, the presents, the cookies, the big dinner. Our daughter typically gets a little present on the first day of Hanukkah and a bigger present on the last day of Hanukkah. One set of grandparents send a couple of little Hanukkah gifts and a check and the other sends a couple of stocking stuffers and a check. The amount of gifts she receives is essentially the same as it would be if we only celebrated one holiday. Share the love Another thing we enjoy about dual holidays is that our daughter can share traditions about both holidays with her friends, no matter what religion they follow, exposing them to a culture they may not have had the opportunity to learn about. Participate wisely When invited to join a new or old tradition on either side of the family, give the ritual a chance. We will try just about anything once. They need to be exposed to what we value, if we expect them to understand and accept our choices. However, we also try to respect the choices that each of our family members make without imposing our life choices on them. Each year her family enjoys exchanging ornaments for the tree and inviting a new group of friends over to play the dreidel game and enjoy potato latkes.

Chapter 3 : As Told By Ginger: Reviewed!: Season 1, Episode "An "Even Steven" Holiday Special"

Historical Person Search Search Search Results Results Emil Carl Dreidel (-) Try FREE for 14 days Try FREE for 14 days How do we create a person's profile? We collect and match historical records that Ancestry users have contributed to their family trees to create each person's profile.

God forbid we even get a white Christmas. Anyway, Ginger is making a family tree, possibly for a school project, in the living room. Lois comes into the living room, so Ginger asks if she has any pictures of Jonas laying around. She looks like a donkey with those bottom teeth sticking out. Wait, why is he writing to Santa? I always assumed the Bishops were Jewish. So, Hoodsey turns around and reads Carl his letter. Get a load of this letter: Hoodsey is thanking Santa for all the awesome toys and "fruit-scented body splashes" he expects to get, and also asks Santa for some "rhythm. Hoodsey is upset that he dances like a typical white boi, and hopes that Santa can fix his two left feet. Carl is deeply disturbed by what he is seeing. Damn, what a baby. Ginger calls Dodie and Macie to tell them about her new heritage, and they are utterly shocked. So, she had a Jewish grandfather. Oh, what the fuck, Dodie? Seriously, what the fuck? Thank God for Macie! Thank God for common sense! Carl suggests Chinese food, but they already did that last year. Ginger is still obsessing over being Jewish, so, naturally, she asks if they can celebrate Hanukkah. Talk about a fucked-up family. The girls continue to work on their family tree projects in the library. Well, Dodie and Macie are. Ginger is still sitting there with the Torah trying to absorb every bit of Judaism as humanly possible. All she wants to do, say, eat, read, and shit is Judaism, Judaism, Judaism. After many biting one-sentence answers, it is revealed that Carl stopped believing when his wish for his dad to visit him for Christmas never came true. In the kitchen, Lois and Ginger throw together a big ole Hanukkah feast, complete with matzo balls and minced potatoes. What a sweet mother-daughter moment. I wish I could have these moments with my own mother. A skinny Santa rings a bell and stands outside to solicit donations: Carl and Hoodsey round the corner. As soon as Carl runs off to do Carl things, Hoodsey runs up to the man in the suit and asks for his advice. And by Santa Claus, nonetheless! He does kind of look like Ginger and Carl. I know, no duhhh. In class, while everyone is showing off their family trees, some kid shows off his giant dreidel to Ginger and talks about Judaism with her. Why am I not surprised? Dodie plays dumb and is like, "Is it for environmental reasons? Did you really just say that? This is, without a doubt, the darkest moment on the show to date. In the doghouse, Carl perfects his newest prank: Oh, come on, you can be more creative with that. Fill it with gravy or syrup Hoodsey barges in and tells Carl that he talked to Santa, and keeps pestering him about his existence. Carl comes right out and tells Hoodsey that all his campaigning is getting on his nerves. So he kicks him out of the doghouse. In the living room, Lois lights a menorah and stands back to admire her work. Okay, water down the meaning for us. This show is geared towards kids, after all. So, Ginger asks Lois if they can celebrate both holidays, and Lois replies, "Whatever floats your boat, kiddo. So, the open house party is well under-way, and Ginger has turned from an obsessive Torah-thumper to a politically correct spaz in extremely high spirits. Damn, can nothing be in moderation with this girl? Why go from one extreme to another? And then Carl comes downstairs in African clothing and a keyboard to present us with his rendition of Jingle Bells. I am so confused. I thought he was going to say something about Kwanzaa. Darren helps Carl set up a novelty reindeer silhouette figurine that pees yellow light: Stay classy, Sheltered Shrubs. Carl spots Jonas sitting outside in his truck, so he walks over to him. Jonas invites Carl to sit next to him, but Carl nonchalantly answers that Lois taught him never to get into a car with strangers. Ouch, indeed, but a well-deserved ouch for being so flaky. But Carl gets in anyway, and Jonas gives him a Christmas present. Once the flames are out, everyone notices that Jonas was the one who saved them all. Everyone leaves, not even bothering to help Lois clean up the mess. And nobody ever gets it right. They always say the meaning of Christmas is about friends and family and all the joy and love they bring, but no one ever says "The meaning of Christmas is about the birth of Jesus Christ. That was sarcasm, by the way. Hoodsey comes downstairs the next morning to open his Christmas presents. The first one he opens is from Carl. Glad we got through that episode. Atheism, fanaticism, a deadbeat dad, and political correctness all rolled into one train wreck of an episode, not to mention tied together with a big, red sentimental bow. I really hope this is the end of the shitty episode trend. Where are all the good episodes this show is known for? Lessons Learned From This Episode:

DOWNLOAD PDF THE DREIDEL FAMILY TREE

Chapter 4 : Home - The Dreidel

FamilySearch Family Tree Caroline Dreidel New York Caroline Dreidel, born Caroline Dreidel was born on month day , at birth place, New York, to Adolph Dreidel and Anna Dreidel.

Chapter 5 : Hanukkah Picture Books - No Time For Flash Cards

The Virtual Western Wall. The Western Wall is a piece of holy real estate that many devout Jews flock to. There's much to know about the Wall, and The Dreidel will be providing lots of cool information and a way for you to get your message delivered to The Wall.

Chapter 6 : Paper Dreidel Craft - Enchanted Learning Software

Genealogies are trees submitted to FamilySearch that can help you fill out your family lines within Family Tree. Accuracy of the data in these genealogies varies from tree to tree; we encourage you to validate all data.

Chapter 7 : Make Edible Dreidels | Activity | www.nxgvision.com

Kit makes a tree like the sample. Your children will feel grown-up because it is so easy to do but has successful results. A great way to celebrate the holiday.