Up until recently, she has been incapable of feeling emotion. Not to mention the monsters that haunt her nightmares have crossed over into real-life. And as her world falls apart, figuring out the secrets of her past becomes a matter of life and death. I discovered this series after finishing Obsidian, by Jennifer Armentrout. I was desperate to chase the first book in the Lux series with something that had romance, tension, and a Sci-Fi edge to it. Not surprisingly, Amazon came to the rescue. So, of course, unable to ignore these desperate pleas to give my cart meaning any longer, I looked at the recommendations Amazon had for me after my most recent book purchase, and BAM! Just like that, my cart had purpose again. I saw the title The Fallen Star, and I was hooked. I decided to skip the sample, and ordered it. Once Jessica Sorensen moved the story and our characters out of the school setting, I fell in love. It was so magical and unique. It was exactly what I was looking for. The secondary characters, Aislin and Laylen are as complicated and intriguing as Alex and Gemma. You will want to after reading the first book. The Young Adult version of this series hit the spot, and left me satisfied. Jessica seamlessly weaved together all of these elements to create an awesome, heart pounding, enjoyably chaotic world. I love writing and reading almost anything that is YA. I absolutely love music. My list of favorite songs could go on and on, since I have a very broad taste in music.

The Fallen Star is Twilight's (quoting myself from an earlier comment) drunk and sloppy cousin. I really don't think that I can actually finish this book, but damn it I am going to try my hardest! There is a shit ton of similarities between the two books.

No one Recommended to Samantha by: There is a shit ton of similarities between the two books. These will have to be hidden by spoiler tags Alex and Gemma only have one class together. Now I have an issue with whiny, sniveling, barely useful, wimpy freaking female leads. This chick has the exact makings of a person who could severely piss me off. I loved the first book in Twilight. I even liked the second one. I was one of those girls who was falling and tripping all over themselves to try and get a copy of the next Twilight book. But I had a problem with Bella, I had a problem with Edward. Bella was annoying at best. Gemma is worse than Bella. She jumped right over annoying and landed right into infuriating territory. There is a whole dumpster truck full of missing information on this book. For instance, I have no idea what she looks like, what anyone else looks like, or for that matter what anything around her looks like. None, zilch, zip, nada, zero. Who the fruck cares? Tell me about the town she lives in! Tell me about what she looks like! Tell me what Alex looks like and Ailsin and Sophia and Marco. There is NO background on any of the characters! Get on with the damn story instead of focusing on Alex and Gemma so much! What happened to this book? How did it get past the publisher? Here is a sentence that just stuck out and made me clench my jaws until I felt like my teeth were cracking. I am not shitting you. My eyes almost started bleeding when I saw this. I literally stared at this sentence for about five minutes wondering how in the hell the author could have miss this eye sore. Then there is the repetition of every word that the author wants to emphasize. She was very, very hungry. I can think of at least two different words that have the same meaning as very very hungry: Famished and ravenous come to mind. Then there is the annoying habit of Alex talking about shit that Gemma likes that the reader had no clue that Gemma liked it until Alex brought it up! What, what, what what what what what on earth is going on????? The dialogue kills me! I practically have to touch my eyeballs to keep them from rolling around in my head. How corny can you be? This is not how a normal conversation is carried out! And the way that Gemma "stands up" to people is ridiculous!! Is she supposed to be mad? We get the weak response of "what the heck is your problem". Grow up and get over it chicky. People will be giving you dirty looks for the rest of your life. This is just practice! And if I have read about how obsessed Gemma is with Alex one more fruckering time I am going to spew green Exorcist chunks all over this book and then toss it into the trash. I apologize for being an icy queen bitch, in advance. I told her that if she stopped cheating on him then maybe things would get better. I think YA has gotten into the habit of sending the wrong message to kids. Since when is it ok to tell kids to "fall in love" with people because of their looks? I drew a blank Why is it OK for a girl to fall for a guy simply because of his looks? Jace treats Clary like shit.

Chapter 3 : Fallen Star “ Jessica Sorensen

Jessica Sorensen is an American www.nxgvision.com novel The Secret of Ella and Micha was featured in the USA Today Bestseller List and was responsible for creating a new wave of New-adult fiction.

Currently residing in Wyoming, she continues to innovate within the new wave of her specific chosen genres. Early and Personal Life Now living in the snow covered mountains of Wyoming, Jessica Sorensen has come a long way in her career, with her three children and husband. Currently she spends most of her time reading and writing as she continues creating her popular line of work daily. Jessica Sorensen is known for making appearances at a number of book signings and conventions for her ever grateful fans. With her rich stories and finely tuned characters, she builds a familiarity with all her protagonists that allows her readers to relate to them in a way few other writers can manage. Looking primarily at romance, she charts the highs and lows of young love, as her audience get to experience everything alongside the author, whilst building a rapport with both her and her readers that has strengthened her brand and will continue to do so into the foreseeable future. Writing Career Jessica Sorensen has written over five series of novels now, as she increases her output daily. Not just focusing on young love in a high-school setting though, she has also gone into the realms of the paranormal, sometimes even branching into dystopian fiction. In total this initial series of hers had four books altogether. Having gotten a number of awards for her work, Jessica Sorensen has not only gained commercial success, but critical adulation as well. Handsome and aloof, she feels things for him that she never knew existed as emotions arise from deep within her coming up to the surface fighting to reveal themselves. Will she and Alex ever become an item and can he notice her? What are the horrifying creatures and why is all this happening to her at this time? Here she introduces her readers to Nova Reed, a one-time drummer with dreams of making it big-time and becoming famous, now resigned to simply getting by as best she can, a shadow of her former self. The dreams of marrying her one true-love seem to have fallen at the wayside too, that is until Quinton Carter steps in to help redeem her and himself. With a lost look in his eyes, she understands they may both be broken inside and it is with that that she attempts to mend the sores of the past and each other. It seems that Nova has other intentions though and he soon starts to break as he lets his guard down and lets her in. Will Quinton ever be able to love again and are they able to overcome the mistakes of their past as they come together? What exactly are the secrets of their past and what are the skeletons in their closets? Can they create a future for themselves other than the one they have as they become who they truly want to be? Jack Reacher is back! Family secrets come back to haunt Reacher when he decides to visit the town his father was born in. Because when he visits there he finds out no-one with the last name of Reacher has ever lived there. It leaves him wondering - did his father ever live there? Jessica Sorensen The bell finally rang and class began. Sterling started off taking role. Sterling moved on to the announcements. Typically, it was a tedious task, but today it took a turn for the surprising. Sterling cleared his throat, trying to shush the whispering that had suddenly combusted amongst everyone. My head whipped up. Sterling was standing behind his podium, sporting a wrinkly grey suit and red striped tie. And, holy crap, standing next to him was Mr. He had a bored expression on his face, his arms folded across his chest, his bright green eyes sparkling beneath the florescent lighting. The sight of him made my heart skip a beat. I let out an unintentional gasp and quickly flung my hand over my mouth, wanting to smack myself in the forehead for reacting so ridiculously. And honestly, I kind of preferred the old way, because her knowing of my existence equaled getting thrown dirty looks and nasty comments. At least on the outside anyway. Like why the sight of this guy was making me react this way? Because, right now, all I could think about was how beautiful his eyes were and how I had the strongest urge to run my fingers through his messy, yet perfect, dark brown hair. I blinked and sank back in my chair, the corners of my eyes burning with tears threatening to spill out. I sucked in a slow breath. I would not let some guy make me cry. She was short and slender with golden blonde hair running in waves down to her shoulders. And she had the same bright green eyes as the new guy. She was dressed in a sparkling pink sweater, jeans, and fur trimmed boots. I instantly got the impression she would probably soon be friends with Kelsey Merritt. Which, I know, is very judgmental of me. Sterling said, motioning at the new guy. The name sounded vaguely familiar. And besides, even if I was, I would have remembered him. Sterling said, scanning the room for some empty chairs. I scowled at the back of her blonde head, suddenly feeling very territorial of Alex. And yes, okay, I knew I in no way had any claim over him. Sterling replied, and I could practically hear an eye roll through his voice. They both can sit there. That way, no rearranging will have to be done. The weight of their eyes felt heavy, and I found myself wishing I possessed the power to temporarily make myself invisible. The prickle on my neck let me know I was experiencing my first anxious moment. I shrank down in my chair and focused on the table. I stayed with my eyes down until a small stack of books landed on the table with a thump. Did I forget to mention my people skills sucked, big time? The chair next to me slid out and Alex sat down in it. I held my breath, waiting nervously for the electricity to attack again. And waited some more. But the electricity seemed to be a no show. Sterling began his lecture on sky charting. I scratched a few notes down, but my attention kept drifting to Alex. He was leaning back in his chair, his arms resting behind his head, his eyes half open. In the middle of my staring, Alex turned his head toward me, his eyelids lifting open. Our eyes met and I froze, unable to breath. And then he glowered at me. Because all I did was look away and pretend to develop a deep interest in my astronomy book. Class moved on so slowly it was unbearable. My sleep had been super crappy due to the reliving-my-death-over-and-over-in-my-nightmares thing. Then again, maybe I was just losing my mind. There did seem to be many things happening to me that could qualify me as being on the brink of insanity. But right as the thought crossed my mind that I just might be going off the deep end, I felt it—a spark. Soft at first, barely tickling at my fingertips, but growing stronger as it surged up my arms and down my back. I had to catch my breath and remind myself to keep breathing as my body hummed with heat. I stole a glance at Alex, curious if he showed any signs of being able to feel the electricity. Absolutely, one-hundred percent, bored. He stared lazily ahead at the front of the classroom where Mr. With Alex seeming so relaxed and calm, I assumed there was no way he could feel the electricity. I guess the strange, electric feeling was a one-sided thing. Of course it was. It was me, after all, we were talking about here—the Queen of Freakiness. But then again—as I peered closer at Alex, I noticed his hands were clenched rather tight. And the line of his jaw looked as if he was biting down hard. Well, either that or Mr. As Alex ran his hand tensely through his hair, he caught my eye. I should have looked away. I mean, how many times could I get caught staring at him before he declared me a stalker? But once my eyes met his, looking away was impossible, like an invisible force had magnetized my gaze to his. My heart thumped deafeningly inside my chest as I stared at him with wide eyes. Time seemed to come to a standstill, electricity spiraling through my body, heating my skin hotter and hotter. I felt like I floating, yet suffocating at the same time. I could barely breathe. The room had started to sway from my lack of oxygen. I sucked in a breath of air. Alex blinked, breaking our gaze. Immediately, he flung his attention back to the front of the classroom. I watched him, confused and somewhat sad. Well, at least about the sad part. The confused part was totally understandable. Electricity that buzzed between two people. What could be more confusing than that? But which one of us was causing it? Although, if I was the one causing it, why did I only feel it when I was around him? Sterling voice rose over my thoughts. Go ahead and begin what? I casually peeked over at Aislin, trying to figure out what the heck I was supposed to be doing. Work in a group. The only time I ever worked in a group was when teachers forced me to. And since this class went by the sit-whenever-you-want-work-with-the-people-at-your-table option, guess what? I never worked in a group. Because I sat alone.

Not to mention the monsters that haunt her nightmares have crossed over into real-life. And as her world falls apart, figuring out the secrets of her past becomes a matter of life and death. How very,very wrong I was. Beautifully written, original plot, great characters. This is saying a lot, from me,who has been through hundreds of books. I absolutely fell I love with Gemma, and her fiery personality. You can imagine him as just another one of the kids in your school; but with a secret. The thing I was most happy about was the uniqueness and imagination the author put into this book. Many other books out there have the same kind of theme; forbidden love, vampires, werewolves, fallen angels. But this book is kind of a non overwhelming composition. Best book ever by PunchBuggy This was one of the best books I have ever read!!! It created soo much emotion in me. I swear I cried about five times while reading this book. I absolutely loved it!
