Tencent, is also splashing out on domestic comics, planning to spend million yuan to sign Chinese artists and develop local characters, which comes on top of an earlier investment in 10 animation projects, the company said in May. NetEase signed a deal last year with Disney to create Marvel style superheroes, but with Chinese characteristics. Luo Qiandan, marketing director of NetEase Comics, said the firm was using big data from its platform to analyze what comic consumers wanted and would feed this back to artists. Email March 14, The Chinese like their Oreos stuffed with mango and orange cream. Americans might get squeamish at the thought of their favorite snacks being tweaked. But what works in the U. In other words, Lee Linthicum, a market researcher, says: Growth in the snack food industry has been virtually flat in the U. Consider the Oreo, which Kraft Food Inc. So Kraft decided to tweak the Oreo. But executives of the Northfield, Ill. In , Kraft began offering the Oreo as a wafer, a popular cookie throughout Asia. It is made up of cream sandwiched between crispy wafers. The plan was to help familiarize more Chinese customers with the brand. Three years later, the company decided to go a step further. Kraft worked with a panel of consumer taste experts from around the world to identify the characteristics of the Oreo " including color, crunchiness, bitterness, color " that were likely to appeal to Chinese tastes. So the company rejiggered the recipe to create a cookie that was a tad smaller and a touch less sweet. To test the new recipe, hundreds of Chinese consumers tasted the new Oreo. It was a hit. After noticing sales of Oreos were lagging in China during the summer, Kraft added a green tea ice cream flavor. The cookie combined a popular local flavor with the cooling imagery of ice cream. The green tea version sold well, and a year later, Kraft rolled out Oreos in flavors that are popular in Asians desserts " raspberry-and-blueberry and mango-and-orange. Over the past five years, Kraft said sales have grown an average of 60 percent a year, although it declined to give revenue amounts. The Oreo now is the top-selling cookie in China with a market share of 13 percent. The previous top cookie was a biscuit by a Chinese company. Kraft, which operates in more than 80 countries, is taking a similar approach with other snacks. In Saudi Arabia, Kraft offers its Tang powder drink in a lemon-pepper flavor. In Mexico, it comes in tropical fruit flavors like tamarind and mandarin, and a hibiscus version fashioned after the flower. The rise in international revenue at Kraft was more than double the increase in North America last year. Kraft also plans to split into two separate units by the end of the year. The largest will be a global snacks company called Mondelez International, pronounced "mohn-dah-leez," to sell its Trident gum and Cadbury chocolates in fast-growing countries worldwide. The company, based in Battle Creek, Mich. In Europe, for instance, Kellogg for many years had marketed its cereals there just as it did in the U. Now, an American traveling in Spain might find it surreal to see TV ads showing All-Bran cereal floating in a steaming cup of coffee. Kellogg, which makes Keebler, Cheez-It and Kashi bars, declined to give details on how well the cereal is selling there, but it said the marketing has resulted in "great results. To achieve that, PepsiCo has had to adjust its recipes. Russians still like packaged versions of a Soviet-era snack " stale bread slathered in oil and baked to a crisp. To get a better sense of what Russians like, employees traveled around the country to visit people in their homes and talk about what they eat day-to-day. That was a big task. Russia has nine time zones and spans 7, miles, with eating habits that vary by region. In the eastern part of the country, PepsiCo found that fish is a big part of the diet. So it introduced "Crab" chips in A "Red Caviar" flavor does best in Moscow, where caviar is particularly popular. Other favorites include onion, bacon and "sour cream and herbs," which is a bit sweeter than the American version.

As there are five classes of animals and there are also five directions they are associated with each other: Another set of five animals are the five noxious creatures: Here are some animals that are noted for their symbolism in Chinese art: Although hard-working it is considered self-interested and so is sometimes used proverbially for selfishness. The ant is rarely portrayed symbolically in works of art. In China there was a view that the whole Earth was on the back of a giant turtle. There is a long association with turtles acting as stabilizing creatures as they are so firmly rooted to the ground. They are thought to eat fire and so may feature as a figure on the end of a roof ridge to help keep fire away. A legend has it that Kuixing , the god of examinations was rescued from suicide by a sea turtle. The text descriptions are a little short but it does give a very good general overall coverage and the photographs and illustrations are very good. A flying magpie and a badger represent happiness both in heaven sky and on earth. While if the magpie is perched they represent wish for future happiness. Wishing good fortune and a long life. The Chinese have long known that bats are flying rodents. Bats are welcome arrivals because they eat huge numbers of flying insect pests. As they hibernate in caves there are legends about white bats that live for a thousand years and their body parts have been used in traditional medicine potions for longevity. Two bats symbolize double happiness. There are many other combinations that have particular meanings, a red bat for example is a wish for great happiness, a bat with peaches a wish for a long and happy life, five bats and a box is a wish for a harmonious life of five blessings. If a pregnant woman dreams of a bear she is supposed to give birth to a son. Although the panda is now the best known Chinese bear historically it is black and grizzly bears that have been known for centuries. Many parts of a bear have been used in traditional medicine particularly the bile and also eaten as a delicacy especially bear paws. A bear is considered a good talisman against robbers. In ancient times, up to the Han dynasty, when they were more numerous, they were used frequently as motifs in artwork. Because bees pollinate they represent the male gender and so if bees are shown with peony flowers this shows a young man seeking love. The character for bee is composed of the insect radical with the character for an awl to represent its sharp sting. The wild Chinese bee is smaller and less ferocious than other bee species. The art of bee-keeping was considered a hobby and honey a luxury food so honey is rarely seen and used. Chinese traditional bee hives were hour-glass shaped with a narrow central opening just large enough to let one bee through. Butterflies as things of beauty and summer warmth are often found in Chinese paintings. In particular a butterfly and plum blossom mean a quest for blissful love. A mandarin duck and a butterfly together signifies unrequited young love. This symbolism is re-enforced by a cat: The most famous Chinese butterfly is the one in the vision of the Daoist philosopher Zhuangzi. Was he dreaming of life as a butterfly or a butterfly dreaming life as a man? A different story about this incident has him, less poetically, chasing a butterfly and stumbling into the grounds of a house where he sees a lovely young lady with whom he falls in love. Those few who managed to jump the gate were transformed into dragons. It is used, in general, as a symbol of a great life achievement achieved through hard work and perseverance. As the fish lays many eggs it also conveys the wish for many children. It has long been associated with wishing success in the state examinations. Wishing contentment and a long life. With so many cute and cuddly cats on the Internet it is perhaps surprising that cats generally have a poor traditional image in China. It should be remembered that cats were kept for pest control and not as pets. The character for cat shows an animal and a field of grain, suggesting its role as vermin catcher. As in Western culture a cat has some more sinister associations. It can see spirits in the dark and should be cremated and not buried as otherwise it could turn into a demon. The arrival of a strange cat to a house bodes ill as it was thought that the cat could sense that misfortune will fall and the house will become dilapidated and soon home to only rats and mice. It is considered the enemy of the snake but is readily eaten by hens. The Dragon Boat festival mid summer was a time to brush away centipedes from the home. The cicada is a potent symbol of immortality due to its life cycle, they emerge as if by magic out of the ground after many years living unseen as a grub eating roots. The symbol of an idealized cicada denotes a wish for immortality and a jade cicada was placed in the mouth of the deceased in ancient times. A cricket can therefore symbolize summer and conflict. The keeping of a cricket or cicada was used as a symbol of significance in the film about the The Last Emperor Puyi. This puts the modern figure of 1, million in into context, it has always been a populous country. There is an ancient legend that some ancient crabs were originally made of jade and has long been used as an aphrodisiac. It symbolizes longevity and riches as deer were believed to live to a great age. The god of longevity is often shown accompanied by deer; it was reputed to be able to locate the herbs of immortality. There is a popular legend about devotion to parents concerning deer. This act makes him one of the 24 examples of filial piety often portrayed in paintings and on porcelain. They are honored by a position in the Chinese zodiac. In northern China paper dogs were thrown into water on the fifth day of the fifth month to drive away evil. In this sense a dog accompanies the god Erlang to drive out demons. This may also explain why dogs were frequently placed at the feet of the dead to guard and keep the deceased company. It is a common radical used for many animals with four legs. A dog that approaches you with its tail wagging is a good sign as it foretells the coming of wealth. The Pekingese lap dog received high favor because it resembled a miniature Buddhist lion , and they were bred to be as lion-like as possible. Examples of extreme loyalty of a dog to its master are noted in legends. Some of the minority people in southern China were believed to be descended from dogs because of their fierce barbarity. Ink and color on paper. Donkeys were a common sight in northern and central China busy plowing the fields or carrying heavy goods. Unlike its close relative the horse it is not in the Chinese astrological zodiac or ancient texts; this suggests it came quite late to China, probably in the Han dynasty. It is associated with poor people and ascetic hermits and so it represents steadfastness and determination. Just as in Europe the donkey has an undeserved reputation for stupidity. One of the eight Daoist Immortals Zhang Guo Lao is often depicted riding a magic donkey which was made of paper so he could fold it up and store it in his bag. The story is that a tiger first spotted a donkey and was scared of the new monster, but seeing it do very little but kick it killed and ate the donkey. In brief summary, the dragon is the mightiest of creatures, master of rain and water and usually good-natured. It has a prestigious place in the astrological years and serves as a symbol principally of the Emperor and therefore the top of the pyramid of animals. Ancient belief ties the dragon to the bringing of life-giving rain in the form of master of the storm clouds. In appearance it is more serpent-like than the Western version and is usually portrayed among the clouds. It is an emblem of summer as they overwinter in the form of grubs and their temporary existence in the air can symbolize fleeting moments. It was believed in ancient China that the wind gave birth to insects as they seem to come in waves borne by storms. Tales from ancient times occasionally mention the mighty elephant; the legendary Emperor Shun is portrayed plowing with an elephant and heroes were shown riding one. Marco Polo reported that the Great Khan Kublai Khan traveled in a great wooden room built on the backs of four elephants. Stone elephants often stand on the Sacred Ways to tombs. It is associated mainly with Buddhism and an elephant is said to have transported the Buddha to the world. Elephants were used in key Imperial ceremonial processions and came from Vietnam and Burma. On the sixth day of the sixth month the keepers took the elephants for a thorough wash in the moat surrounding the city wall. It first came from Indian elephants. When they were plentiful the trunk was considered a culinary delicacy and the hide was used to bind serious wounds. Chinese people have for a long time kept fish as pets in ponds and bowls. Fish were a very important part of the ordinary diet of the Chinese, as fish rather than meat often provided the protein. Fish are often eaten at the Spring Festival symbolizing a wish for abundance in the year to come. Fish are often shown in pairs, some think this is a metaphor for the shape of the taiji figure, as a pair they are one of the eight treasures , others that is about conjugal bliss. There are legends of drunken men turning into fish demons , who could be unmasked because they need to bathe each day. Because fish breed prolifically and are frequently seen in pairs they can symbolize marriage and wish for many children. The art of government has been likened to the art of fishing as it requires both patience and careful observation. There is a legend that Emperor Fuxi learned the art of fishing and invented the fish trap. In the West a fox is admired for its cleverness and determination, in China it has a much more evil connotation. It is reputed to live to a great age, when it reaches fifty it can turn itself into a woman , at hundred a seductive girl and at a thousand it becomes a powerful god with nine tails. The association with spirits may originate from the observation that foxes raided graves for the food laid out for the ancestors , and so were thought to be the departing spirit of the deceased.
