Navy sailors in October Perdue campaigning for former U. Air Force , rising to the rank of captain before his discharge. Governor Pierre Howard asking for more responsibilities, and Howard obliged. He shortly after became a committee chairman, then climbed the leadership ladder to majority leader, then Senate Pro-Tempore. Many credit Pierre Howard for helping Perdue build the early foundation of what would become his future political career. He switched party affiliation from Democrat to Republican in and was reelected to the Senate as a Republican. He also won reelection in Governor of Georgia [edit] Elections [edit] In December , Perdue resigned as state senator and devoted himself entirely to running for the office of Governor of Georgia. Libertarian Garrett Michael Hayes was also on the ballot. Perdue then decided that the Go Fish Education Center would be built down the road from his home. After Perdue took office, in and , Georgia moved up from last place in the country in SAT scores. Although it returned to last place in , [23] Georgia rose to 49th place in in the combined math and reading mean score, including the writing portion added to the test that year. The design of the Georgian flag was widely unpopular, being derisively named the "Barnes flag", and the North American Vexillological Association deemed it the ugliest U. However, Perdue was faced with a Democratic House that would not consider having the flag on the referendum due to its Confederate origins, and he needed support for a tobacco tax he wanted to pass to raise revenue. Perdue wrote that "liberals have lost all credibility when it comes to climate science because their arguments have become so ridiculous and so obviously disconnected from reality. To very reverently and respectfully pray up a storm" and "God, we need you; we need rain". The Georgia Department of Natural Resources figures show 21, people visited the Perry facility in fiscal , which ended June In , he founded Perdue Partners, which facilitates the export of U. Others issues addressed by Perdue include assisting rural communities, helping farmers operate with less regulation, increasing exports, passing the Farm Bill , and addressing crop damage caused by dicamba. He enjoys flying and, in a incident, was accused of flying a state helicopter without a license.
